NORWAY SEEKS ARMISTICE AFTER BRITISH LEAVE ALL POINTS BELOW ARCTIC CIRCLE

Chamberlain Government Scored for Defeat by Nazis

Loss of Most of Norway Brings Cautic Criticism From Liberal Nationals

"The Country Cannot Be Properly Organized until the Government Goes" Davies Asserts

By EDWIN STOUT

London, May 3, (AP)—Great Britain tonight announced the abandonment of Namsos and central Norway to the Germans — an acknowledgement that added new force to unrest surging within the very foundation of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's government.

A communique telling of the end of the campaign to wrest southern Norway from the Germans said Allied troops still in the far northern Narvik area repulsed German counterattacks Wednesday and Thursday. It mentioned no operations there today.

Coming as it did within a day of the abandonment of Andalsnes, tonight's announcement quickened attacks on the Chamberlain government even from within its own ranks.

Clement Davies, member of the Liberal Nationals who support the government declared:

"The country can not be properly organized until the government goes."

Davies told of a meeting with a group of colleagues who thought the same way he did and decided to work against any vote of confidence during "the biggest crisis we ever had to face."

Announce Withdrawal

The terse war office communique announced the Namsos withdrawal during last night, after a day of uncertainty in which Britons already had heard the news from Sweden and Germany, said the "re-embarkation was carried out with complete success and without loss." (Norwegian reports said a German air bomb killed thirty, wounded sixty).

It said the abandonment of the Namsos front, north of Germanheid Trondheim, was carried out "in accordance with the general plan of withdrawal from the immediate neighborhood of Trondheim."

It read very much like Prime Minister Chamberlain's statement yesterday telling of the withdrawal from Andalsnes to the south of Trondheim.

Despite tonight's announcement, a reliable military source earlier in the day had declared emphatically that Great Britain has "no intention of abandoning Norway."

Gloom nevertheless spread over the rooms of the Norwegian legation and the ominous word "sub-

J. Millard Tawes Says Radcliffe Is 'Natural' Senator

State Comptroller Praises Accomplishments of Candidate

Baltimore, May 3 (AP) — State Comptroller J. Millard Tawes tonight declared Senator George L. Radclie is a natural-born senator" whose "environment, education and training have been pointed toward public service throughout his entire life."

Radcliffe's temperament and accomplishments in the Senate make him a logical candidate for re-election, Tawes said in a radio address.

"Government is its own speciality," he said. "It has its own highly specialized problems and calls for experience and training which cannot be found elsewhere."

Tawes asserted that Radcliffe's Senate record and public service before he became senator have given him "definite experience" in the senate "in the very time and in the very problem which still confront the national government."

Radcliffe, Tawes continued, is "deliberate, philosophical and judicial," but has been "very roughly badgered" by Howard Bruce, his opponent for the Democratic senatorial nomination, in the campaign.

"In his assault upon Senator Radcliffe, Mr. Bruce has disclosed

Germany Boasts Of Strength To Resist Enemies

Asks What Britain Will Do About "Catastrophic Defeat"

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER

Berlin, May 3. (AP) — Germany boasted of full preparedness tonight to resist any stroke by Britain to offset her "catastrophic defeat" in Norway.

Alert for action they said must come from the British in an effort to revive their prestige, Germans said "we are prepared, come what may" in any new theater of war while mopping up proceeds quickly in Norway. They predicted this task would be finished in less than two weeks except for the besieged far northern port of Narvik.

Attention mainly was riveted on the Mediterranean as the possible scene of British action following Prime Minister Chamberlain's announcement yesterday of the concentration of a British and French battle fleet at Alexandria.

"Up to Mussolini"

Authorized sources emphasized, however, that it is up to Premier Mussolini of Italy to decide what to do about the Mediterranean situation.

Whatever his decision, it was said, Germany then will fulfill her obligations.

Germans asserted their attention also was directed unceasingly toward the Netherlands, Belgium and Scandinavia as possible places for British action.

In this atmosphere Germans said their motto is: "wherever Britain strikes, we will strike back doubly hard."

At almost the same hour that authorized spokesmen boasted of German preparedness, Adolf Hitler and Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering were giving confidential pep talks to 6,000 army and air force officers and leaders in Berlin's Sportspalast.

Hitler Quotes Shakespeare

Hitler, according to the only sentence of his talk released for publication, paraphrased Shakespeare's words in Hamlet, "to be, or not to be: that is the question," in saying the present war is "a figha for being, or not being, of the German people."

In late afternoon reports on the Norwegian campaign, DNB, official

Roosevelt Asks Critics To State Better Programs

Addressing a gatherin of Democratic women from the south portico of the White House, he declared:

"We say in an election year to candidates for president and vice president, and to 'would-be' senafors and representatives, 'quit condemning each and every act of this administration and tell us just how you would change the laws if you were in power.' "

Gen. Butler Predicts Hitler Will Win War

Tulsa, May 3 (AP) — Maj. Gen. Smedley Butler predicts "Hitler will win this war."

The former U. S. Marine Corps commander told the Oklahoma Bankers Association:

"Eventually other neutrals, scared stiff, will ask his 'protection' and the war will be over."

Headless Bodies Of 3 Men Found In Old Box Cars

Word "Nazi" Carved on Chest of One; Surgeon or Butcher Sought

Pittsburgh, May 3 (AP) — Headless bodies of three men, with the word "Nazi" carved on the chest of one in five-inch letters, were found today in box cars assigned to the scrap heap at the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie railroad yards in nearby Stowe township.

Authorities advanced one theory the three were victims of the "mad butcher of Kingsbury run," blamed for twelve torso slayings in Cleveland, because of the similarity to the "butcher's" work. Two of the bodies had been dissected with the dexterity of a surgeon or a butcher.

Deputy Coroner Anthony Sappo said, however, the "mad butcher" angle was "confused" by the discovery of the word "Nazi" and a report that the box cars had been on a Youngstown, O., siding for a year before they were shipped to Struthers, O., April 19 and one to Pittsburgh two days later. He added:

Secret Society Hint

"The word Nazi indicates a possibility there might be some secret society, opposed to the Nazis, connected with the case. That's speculation, of course, and only investigation will tell."

All of the bodies, apparently those of men from thirty to forty years old, were nude and there were no clues that might lead to their identity except some paper bags and a Youngstown, O., newspaper dated Dec. 11, 1939.

The Youngstown newspaper and blood stains showed, Coroner P. J. Henney said, the third man might have been murdered in the car. He added:

"There is sufficient blood around to indicate that. And it could have happened in December, shortly after that paper was printed."

More than fifty other cars which arrived from Struthers on April 21 were checked but no additional bodies were found.

Struthers is fifteen miles from a New Castle, Pa., swamp where the headless body of a young man was found last October and eight other bodies have been discovered in the last ten years.

Surgeon or Butcher?

Dr. P. R. Helmbold, coroner's physician, said the two dissected bodies found here had been cut up by an "expert who had some knowledge of surgery or was a butcher."

"It seems that a butcher knife was used, and by someone who knew how to handle it," Helmbold added. "All of the cuts were neatly made and there were no nicks in the bone or flesh surrounding the cuts. The killer knew his anatomy."

Arms, legs and thighs were found with the two bodies but the heads of all three were missing.

Roosevelt Seeks To Halt Spread Of War to Italy

President Reveals Efforts To Prevent Move by Mussolini

Washington, May 3, (AP) — An effort by the United States to prevent the spread of the European war to the Mediterranean was revealed today by President Roosevelt.

Explaining the conferences that have been held in the past few days between Premier Mussolini and the American ambassador to Rome and between the President himself and the Italian ambassador to Washington, Mr. Roosevelt said this country was striving, as it had all along, to prevent the extension of the European war to new areas.

Informed sources said Ambassador Phillips might have told Mussolini that if Italy became a belligerant it would have an unfortunately effect on American public opinion.

Some speculation was aroused over a White House luncheon today at which President Roosevelt played host to Henry L. Stimson, Republican former secretary of state, and Felix Frankfurter, associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Stimson has frequently come out in open letters in support of foreign policies of President Roosevelt. He has advocated what he termed an "affirmative" policy against "militarized aggression."

Both Frankfurter and Stimson insisted, however, that the call had no significance.

Bill To Aid Vet Signed 4 Months After His Death

Los Angeles, May 3 (AP)—Yesterday President Roosevelt signed a bill which was intended to prevent the separation of an American-born soldier, who fought for Canada in the World War, and his Canadian-born wife.

Today the woman disclosed that death separated them Jan. 1.

"He killed himself; I guess he just couldn't stand it any longer," said 38-year old Mrs. Fred W. Buchholz.

Thus in almost unnoticed tragedy was ended the case of the 45-year old war veteran which last year drew nationwide attention.

Because Buchholz stabbed himself to death in a private sanitarium in a county where he was not a resident, his death passed unchronicled for four months.

The Buchholz's were married in Canada where six of their children were born. The three others were born after they came to Los Angeles in 1932. Because Mrs. Buchholz entered the country on a temporary visa, the labor department ordered her deportation.

American Legion officials got behind a legislative move to prevent the family's separation. Yesterday the president signed the necessary bill.

Last fall, driven frantic by his problem, records disclose that Buchholz was confined to a state mental institution. Just before Christmas, however, he was pronounced cured and rejoined his family. He also was given back his job as janitor in an automobile factory. Shortly thereafter, he was put in an Orange county institution.

Commander Says Allies Moved Out without Even Notifying the Defenders

Col. Getz Blames British for Plight of Many Norwegian Troops in Central Area; Declares Further Fighting against German War Machine Would Be Useless

London, May 4 (Saturday) (AP)—The war office said early today "there is no foundation for the statement that the Norwegian commander-in-chief was not informed of the Allied decision to withdraw from the Trondheim area or that he has negotiated an armistice; the Norwegian commander-in-chief and his staff embarked on a British man-o-war the night of May 1, 1940."

By THOMAS F. HAWKINS

Stockholm, May 3, (AP)—The expeditionary armies of the Allies today abandoned the whole of Norway below the Arctic circle and the Norwegian central command, left to hold the line against the massive German war machine almost without bullets, bitterly gave up the fight and sued for an armistice in the central area.

From the little town of Grong, on the Steinkjer Namsos front above Trondheim, emptied of Allied troops in a startling two day withdrawal and reembarkment, acting Norwegian Comander Col. O. B. Getz sent word of the surrender in an order of the day surcharged with disillusionment.

German forces later were reported to have reached Grong and to have made contact with the Norwegians, with all fighting reported stopped.

Getz, at the reported instigation of a majority of his officers, decided to ask for the armistice for the whole Trondheim area after the Allies left. He did not, however, speak for the Norwegian government, which alone has power to sue for peace for the country as a whole, and so far has made no such move.

He placed full blame for his plight on the Allies.

PUTS BLAME ON ALLIES

"The British and French—for reasons unknown to us—have given up helping us in our fight and have withdrawn their troops from Namsos," he said.

"We stand today alone against the entire German war machine, already outflanked and encircled on the line which the British and French should be holding . . . without aid from outside . . . with only enough ammunition for one day . . . without planes and other necessary war materials.

"Any further fighting would only lead to destruction, without serving any military purpose.

"I therefore am notifying the German military command to establish contact toward establishing peace in the Tronddlag area (all the area both north and south of Trondheim), as has been done in the southern part of the country.

"It is my heavy duty as acting commander of Tronddlag to give this notice to the soldiers under my command."

To this, Colonel Getz added:

"Impossible Retreat"

"It was an incomprehensible action on the part of the British and French, without notifying me, to lay open my flanks in the rear so I was cut off from any possible retreat toward Mosjoen."

German troops were expected in the area held by the Norwegians at any moment.

The Allies' general withdrawal

Reorganization of State Police Announced by Col. Beverly Ober

Baltimore, May 3 (AP)—Reorganization of the state police into four districts and complete revision of the department's administrative setup was announced today by Col. Beverly Ober, superintendent of the force.

Described as an effort to reduce "paper work" and increase the number of officers available for highway duty, the reorganization established three main bureaus directly responsible to the superintendent and Capt. Edward Mck. Johnson, executive officer.

The old system of two districts, one for the Eastern Shore and another for the Western Shore, under command of lieutenants, was discarded. Substations were consolidated geographically, under command of sergeants, as follows:

District 9 "A" (Southern Maryland)—Waldorf and Waterloo substations, under command of first Sergt. Charles B. Durham.

District "C" (Eastern Shore) — Easton and Salisbury substations, commanded by acting First Sergt. John P. Nowicki.

District "D" (North Central) — Benson, Randellstown and Conowingo substations, commanded by Acting First Sergt. Edward S. Haddaway.

Durham and Haddaway were elevated from sergeants while Dillinger and Nowicki held the rank of corporal.

The key bureaus will be the "field force", commanded by Lieut. Ruxton Ridgely; administrative bureau, commanded by Lieut. Andrew Con-

Elgin Asks Probe of Alleged Plot To Defraud State of Auto Taxes

Annapolis, Md., May 3, (AP) — Motor Vehicles Commissioner W. Lee Elgin asked Governor O'Conor today to order a state investigation into an alleged conspiracy to defraud the state of automobile tax funds.

Elgin wrote O'Conor that "it is obvious that there is a breakdown in the system of the (Baltimore) city tax collector's office and it is recommended that a thorough investigation be made by your state auditors."

Elgin asserted "there is every reason to believe that a tremendous amount of revenue is unaccounted for."

Two men, one an employe of the city bureau of receipts, were arrested yesterday on the conspiracy charges resulting from a state police investigation covering several months. Col. Beverly Ober, state police superintendent, said the inquiry showed motorists had been obtaining license tags without first paying personal property taxes required by law before issuance of the tags.

The city employe, police said, perforated the tag applications "taxes paid" in return for bribes. At the arraignment of the two men, State Police Detective Sergeant Menash Katz asserted the illegal perforations had continued over a period of years.

Meanwhile, State's Attorney J. Bernard Wells said today auditors would go into the bureau of receipts next week to check defalcations for which two former city employes now are under indictment and would give attention to the tag perforation case.

Recently, a tax cashier, Albert E. Schmidt, and Neal Grant, a former deputy city collector, were presented by the grand jury on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the city in a shortage report to total about $71,000. Their case was not directly concerned with the present state police investigation.

British and French Fleet Reaches Alexandria Near the Suez Canal

Alexandria, Egypt, May 3 (AP)—A British and French war fleet arrived this afternoon at this strategic East Mediterranean port at the mouths of the Nile and near the entrance to the Suez canal.

Superseding the mid-Mediterranean British island of Malta in importance, Alexandria was put in readiness for any eventuality as the Allies, their major forces withdrawn from Norway, prepared for possible extension of the war to the near east.

Coastal and anti-aircraft batteries were manned, military flying was reduced to conserve engines and personnel, and the "desert air watch" of lonely Egyptian sentinels linked by telephone was strung out across the sands from the Nile delta to the western frontier with Italian Lybya.

The Allied naval force, which Prime Minister Chamberlain yesterday in London described as a "battle fleet" accompanied by cruisers and auxiliary craft, is expected to be augmented heavily soon.

Throughout Egypt army and police leaves were cancelled and armed guards were placed at all important points.

Egypt's Premier Maher Pasha, after conferring with defense chiefs and British Ambassador Sir Miles Lampson, declared that the situation was serious but there was "no occasion for immediate alarm."

The Allied naval squadron which sailed into the sunny harbor of Alexandria, within striking distance of the Dodecanese islands, was the strongest ever assembled in the Mediterranean.

A long line of gray warships stretched from Alexandria harbor almost to the horizon.

To this, Colonel Getz added:

"Impossible Retreat"

"It was an incomprehensible action on the part of the British and French, without notifying me, to lay open my flanks in the rear so I was cut off from any possible retreat toward Mosjoen."

German troops were expected in the area held by the Norwegians at any moment.

Miner Found Dead

Fairmont, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—School children at Ida May found the body of Arthur Koonce, 48, in an outhouse.

Reorganization of State Police Announced by Col. Beverly Ober

Baltimore, May 3 (AP)—Reorganization of the state police into four districts and complete revision of the department's administrative setup was announced today by Col. Beverly Ober, superintendent of the force.

Described as an effort to reduce "paper work" and increase the number of officers available for highway duty, the reorganization established three main bureaus directly responsible to the superintendent and Capt. Edward Mck. Johnson, executive officer.

The old system of two districts, one for the Eastern Shore and another for the Western Shore, under command of lieutenants, was discarded. Substations were consolidated geographically, under command of sergeants, as follows:

District 9 "A" (Southern Maryland)—Waldorf and Waterloo substations, under command of first Sergt. Charles B. Durham.

District "C" (Eastern Shore) — Easton and Salisbury substations, commanded by acting First Sergt. John P. Nowicki.

District "D" (North Central) — Benson, Randellstown and Conowingo substations, commanded by Acting First Sergt. Edward S. Haddaway.

Durham and Haddaway were elevated from sergeants while Dillinger and Nowicki held the rank of corporal.

The key bureaus will be the "field force", commanded by Lieut. Ruxton Ridgely; administrative bureau, commanded by Lieut. Andrew Con-

Elgin Asks Probe of Alleged Plot To Defraud State of Auto Taxes

Annapolis, Md., May 3, (AP) — Motor Vehicles Commissioner W. Lee Elgin asked Governor O'Conor today to order a state investigation into an alleged conspiracy to defraud the state of automobile tax funds.

Elgin wrote O'Conor that "it is obvious that there is a breakdown in the system of the (Baltimore) city tax collector's office and it is recommended that a thorough investigation be made by your state auditors."

Elgin asserted "there is every reason to believe that a tremendous amount of revenue is unaccounted for."

Two men, one an employe of the city bureau of receipts, were arrested yesterday on the conspiracy charges resulting from a state police investigation covering several months. Col. Beverly Ober, state police superintendent, said the inquiry showed motorists had been obtaining license tags without first paying personal property taxes required by law before issuance of the tags.

The city employe, police said, perforated the tag applications "taxes paid" in return for bribes. At the arraignment of the two men, State Police Detective Sergeant Menash Katz asserted the illegal perforations had continued over a period of years.

Meanwhile, State's Attorney J. Bernard Wells said today auditors would go into the bureau of receipts next week to check defalcations for which two former city employes now are under indictment and would give attention to the tag perforation case.

Recently, a tax cashier, Albert E. Schmidt, and Neal Grant, a former deputy city collector, were presented by the grand jury on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the city in a shortage report to total about $71,000. Their case was not directly concerned with the present state police investigation.

British and French Fleet Reaches Alexandria Near the Suez Canal

Alexandria, Egypt, May 3 (AP)—A British and French war fleet arrived this afternoon at this strategic East Mediterranean port at the mouths of the Nile and near the entrance to the Suez canal.

Superseding the mid-Mediterranean British island of Malta in importance, Alexandria was put in readiness for any eventuality as the Allies, their major forces withdrawn from Norway, prepared for possible extension of the war to the near east.

Coastal and anti-aircraft batteries were manned, military flying was reduced to conserve engines and personnel, and the "desert air watch" of lonely Egyptian sentinels linked by telephone was strung out across the sands from the Nile delta to the western frontier with Italian Lybya.

The Allied naval force, which Prime Minister Chamberlain yesterday in London described as a "battle fleet" accompanied by cruisers and auxiliary craft, is expected to be augmented heavily soon.

Throughout Egypt army and police leaves were cancelled and armed guards were placed at all important points.

Egypt's Premier Maher Pasha, after conferring with defense chiefs and British Ambassador Sir Miles Lampson, declared that the situation was serious but there was "no occasion for immediate alarm."

The Allied naval squadron which sailed into the sunny harbor of Alexandria, within striking distance of the Dodecanese islands, was the strongest ever assembled in the Mediterranean.

A long line of gray warships stretched from Alexandria harbor almost to the horizon.

Greece Alarmed Over Movement of The British Fleet

Arrival of Warships in Alexandria Causes Apprehension

By EDWARD KENNEDY

Athens, May 3. (AP)—Arrival of a British-French battle fleet in Alexandria and reports of large-scale Italian naval, air and army concentrations in the Dodecanese islands switched southeastern Europe's anxiety over possible spread of the war sharply to Greece tonight.

Athens, itself was calm, but alert.

In Turkey, the Allied fleet's arrival at its Egyptian base was greeted as new evidence that Britain and France are determined to fulfill their obligations in the near-east, which include a mutual assistance treaty with Turkey and guarantees of the independence of both Greece and Rumania.

There was no outward show of belief either in Greece or Turkey that war is imminent, but both countries pursued their defense preparations.

Reports received in diplomatic quarters of Italian reinforcements in the Dodecanese remained without official confirmation but generally were given credence.

Tension in Yugoslavia, which had diminished a little with Italian diplomatic assurances of the past few days that there was no reason to fear an Italian thrust, became more acute as a result of the Mediterranean activities.

However, all of southeastern Europe was too wearied by recurrent war scares to show much emotion.

In Turkey, five more Germans were arrested on suspicion of spying and propaganda-spreading. In Ankara, it was reported Hitler had sent for his ambassador, Franz von Papen.

Loss of Most

mission" was heard there for the first time.

Evidence that the British plan was to transfer at least some troops to other Norwegian areas was seen, however, in a statement issued tonight to this effect:

"Major General Paget, in his plan for the evacuation of Anadalsnes, proposed to transfer with the British forces all the Norwegian troops which the Norwegian high command decided could best be employed in other areas. The necessary instructions were given to accede to this request but it is not known yet in London how many have in fact thus been transferred."

Britains struck by air at Nazi bases at Ry, Denmark, Fornebu, near Oslo, and Stavanger and the admiralty flashed a "we are proud of our fleet air arm."

These failed, however, to divert London from the crux of the situation—further withdrawals from Norway.

Law Backs Davies

Adding his voice to Davies, Richard K. Law, member of Parliament for staunchly conservative Hull, opened fire on the government "attitude to the problem" which he said "must be changed before the country is in sight of victory."

This son of Bonar Law, who the Conservative party under Asquith, derided "widespread and highly dangerous delusions that the war is going to win itself without loss or sacrifice, that time is on our side and that Hitler has missed the bus."

The "miss the bus" phrase is from Chamberlain's April 4 speech and already has been thrown in his face by Liberal Leader Sir Archibald Sinclair.

Thus for the first time since the start of the war members of Parliament themselves showed there were signs of rebellion against Chamberlain his own Conservative party.

This is highly important, since neither Labor nor the opposition Liberals have enough votes to overthrow the government and any change must come with connivance of members of the government ranks.

Informed sources believed tonight that unless a signal victory for British arms is announced before next Tuesday the fate of Chamberlain and his government hangs on statements then by the Prime Minister and Churchill and the debate which is to follow.

Assisting Lieutenant Ridgely will be first sergeants W. H. Weber and Frederick Barnickol. Weber was promoted from sergeant. Barnickol formerly was the only officer on the force with the rank of first sergeant. Assisting Conner will be Sergeant-Major George E. Carlson.

Conner's administrative bureau will include the quartermaster division and communications.

Colonel Ober emphasized that the new organization was not a "military setup" but followed recommendations of the International Association of Chiefs of Police. Personnel and organization experts worked on the plans for more than four months, he added.

Youth and Girl Found Murdered

Stockton, Calif., May 3. (AP)—A Stockton youth and his girl companion, their throats cut and their arms and legs trussed, were found dead in a field today.

Nathan Chinchiolo, 23, member of a well-known Stockton family, and Dorothy Woofter, 19, of nearby Tracy, disappeared Sunday. Worried parents reported their absence next day.

Monday night the automobile in which they were last seen was found abandoned in Fresno, 100 miles away, with a bloodstain on the seat and a window broken.

Chinchiolo had been bound with a belt from the girl's coat and with straps of its lining. He had been gagged. Miss Woofter's hands were tied behind her back.

Dr. Orrin Fry, general autopsy surgeon of the San Joaquin general hospital, said death was caused by the throat wounds.

Swedes Expect No Help from the Allies If They Are Attacked

Stockholm, May 3. (AP)—Swedes in general tonight subscribed to this belief, expressed following the Allied withdrawals from Norway by the newspaper Tidningen:

"It seems as if the search for a battlefield has been resumed; as if Norway had been given up as being too difficult, to be replaced by the Mediterranean . . . Neutrals have again been told they must rely on themselves, if threatened."

Searching Party Finds Boy's Body

Hagerstown, Md., May 3 (AP) — A searching party today found the body of Stanley R. Barney, 16, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., who was drowned in the Potomac river below Hancock April 17.

Walter Culp, a member of the searching party, located the body lodged against a submerged tree about a mile below the spot where the boat in which Barney was fishing with his brother, S. T. Barney, 21, capsized in the swollen river.

The body of the elder youth has not been found.

Delbert Stotler, also of Berkeley Springs, who was in the boat with the Barney brothers, swam safely ashore after the boat capsized.

Germany Boasts

German news agency, said there was increased fighting in the Narvik region, that in the Steinkjer region north of Trondheim there was "lively reconnaissance activity," and that in western and southern Norway "the situation x x x can generally be designated as pacified."

Following the regular high command communique, containing claims to blows against Allied sea power, DNB reported that 135 units of the British fleet had been put out of action since April 9, the day the Norwegian invasion started.

Foreign office sources charged Chamberlain with "plans for widening the area of combat" because of the sending of a battle fleet to Alexandria and asked whether Rumania, Greece or Yugoslavia was to be "the next victim."

"After his catastrophic defeat in Norway," they added, "Churchill (British First Lord of Admiralty Winston Churchill) is yearning for vengeance.

"He will try to equalize his defeat by success elsewhere, but we are forewarned and ready."

INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

Reported Franco-British evacuation of all Norway except for a foothold at Narvik heightens the gloom with which Allied sympathizers await more complete revelation of what that abrupt about-face means.

London spokesmen back up Prime Minister Chamberlain's assertion that the fight for Norway will go on. Yet Allied withdrawal of the forces landed north of Trondheim as well as those south of the city could have only one significance.

It must mean that the war in Norway from now on will be war in the air only. Norway appears destined to become a cockpit for rival Nazi and British air fighters. Days and nights of ceaseless terror lie ahead for Norwegian communities adjacent to actual or potential air fields or U-boat bases.

Predict Use of Airfields

The Allied high command faces the imminent danger that Germany will employ Norwegian-Danish airfields, harbors and fjords for large scale air and submarine attacks on North sea shipping. The only recourse seems to be to concentrate British air attack on every such target.

Claims of London spokesmen, including Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, that the Allied naval convoy system has already "mastered" Germany's air, submarine and mine attack, are due for another test. Failure of Allied air fighters to prevent German use of Scandinavian bases to bring the attack closer home to Britain's ship lanes and east coast ports would be a graver matter than the Trondheim defeat.

Nor can it be doubted that in some measure the virtual cessation during the Norwegian campaign of Nazi destruction of Allied and neutral shipping in the North Sea represented a German air and naval concentration on swift completion of the Scandinavian stroke. Allied withdrawal from all of Norway but Narvik means quick release of German air power to resume the sea raiding.

Ruthless War Predicted

The war in Norway must go on ruthlessly by air, at least, if that new upsurge of German attack at sea is to be countered effectively. That, presumably, is the meaning of Chamberlain's declaration that the Norwegian front had not been abandoned or become a "sideshow" of the war. It is a grim forecast for Norway and Denmark, ground between the Allied-German war millstones as helpless and unwilling victims of the struggle.

If the Allied operations in neutral Norway have in fact been scaled down to only air warfare, the Narvik adventure has lost much of its original value from an Allied standpoint. It has choked off any German use of that route for movement of Swedish iron ore to Germany; but the Baltic route via Sweden's port of Lulea will be ice free within weeks if not days. Narvik will be unimportant to Germany until winter comes again, unless Sweden is drawn into the war.

There seems little Allied salvage value about the retreat from Norway. Every consideration urges upon Franco-British leadership some drastic move to counter quickly for that setback. Increasing Allied pressure on Italy to disclose her real intentions in the struggle points strongly to the Mediterranean as the theater where London and Paris hope to retrieve Allied prestige.

Line Drive Injures Cleveland Player

Washington, May 3 (AP)—A line drive in batting practice today fractured every bone in the left cheek of Oscar Grimes, Cleveland Indian utility infielder, physicians reported tonight.

Dr. E. W. Meloy operated upon Grimes and expressed belief his eyesight would not be impaired. He estimated Grimes might not be able to play baseball for two months.

If the ball had struck an inch higher the infielder would have been killed, Dr. Meloy said.

Grimes has been playing first base in place of Hal Trosky who was called home by his son's illness.

Wage-Hour Law

it surveyed its handiwork in its entirety and found it bad.

A roll-call vote of 211 to 171 undid all that had been done and rejected the amendments as a whole. A second vote, 205 to 175, recommitted the entire subject to the House Labor Committee for further study and recommendations.

No Action This Session

Under the prevailing situation, leaders had no expectation that the committee could complete its work in time for action before the session's scheduled June adjournment.

The result was both a victory and a defeat for administration leaders in Congress. The latter had vigorously opposed the sweeping amendments which were written into the bill in the course of the debate. Their victory lay in the fact that in the end these amendments were rejected.

But, the administration forces had endorsed a series of milder changes, most of them proposed by the wage-hour administration itself. Chairman Norton (D-NJ) and her colleagues of the Labor Committee made a last minute effort to obtain approval of these by opposing the motion to recommit—but lost.

Near Riot in House

Today's discussion was of a piece with the debate which had gone before. Rep. Parsons (D-Ill), presiding, beat an almost constant tattoo with his gavel in an effort to maintain order.

One speaker who was heard, however, was Rep. McCormack (D-Mass).

"This is the most disgraceful spectacle I have seen in my twelve years in the House," he shouted. "This is not a Congress but a chaotic group of men."

Loudspeaker Insults Start Sharp Fighting On the Rhine Front

Basle, Switzerland, May 3 (AP)—French and German soldiers got so worked up over an exchange of loudspeaker insults from one line to the other that the nearest thing to a battle yet staged on the Rhine front continued for an hour tonight.

It started when the broadcaster on a German musical program which entertains the French through a loudspeaker departed from the usual insults to the British and compliments to the French to brag about the German victory in Norway.

This so excited the French broadcaster that he made uncomplimentary references about Adolf Hitler.

For an hour thereafter the whole sector north of Basle resounded with rifle, machine-gun and heavy artillery fire.

Military observers estimated that at least $50,000 worth of ammunition was used up by both sides — and they doubted whether anyone in Germany's west wall or France's Maginot line even had been wounded.

Bullets Damage American Ships

Officers and Crew Disagree as to Which Side Fired upon Her

New York, May 3. (AP)—The little American freighter Flying Fish, her deck plates pitted by bullets as mementoes of the German-British battle for Bergen, returned home today with master and crew in sharp dispute as to which side had fired upon her.

All agreed, however, that the bullets which struck the Flying Fish and another American vessel, the Charles R. McCormick — cutting away the latter's mast stays and wire rigging—had been fired either by accident or by mistakes in the identities of the targets.

Speaking for fifteen fellow seamen, George Gilbert declared unequivocally that it was an Allied plane that, on April 12, loosed three bursts of machinegun fire upon the hapless Flying Fish, making her maiden voyage.

Captain W. W. Wollaston insisted, just as flatly, that his ship was struck accidentally by shells from a Norwegian land battery which had been seized by the invading Germans.

Aside from the controversy between skipper and men the Flying Fish brought back news that the Germans in Bergen had taken over 650 tons of fish oil—used in lubricating guns—which had been taken there by the Flying Fish as part of her cargo.

American Defense Program Changes by Developments Abroad

Washington, May 3, (AP) — President Roosevelt reported today that the European air and sea war had dictated changes in American defense weapons but that the changes did not necessitate any delay in carrying out the current program for a stronger army and navy.

Almost simultaneously members of Congress heard from Major General Henry H. Arnold, chief of the air corps, that 1,900 new first-line fighting planes the army expects to have in service fourteen months hence will be fully equipped with improvements developed by the war.

Members of a Senate Appropriations subcommittee before whom Arnold testified said these improvements include self-sealing fuel tanks, bullet-proof windshields, armor, and harder-hitting guns. Only fifty-two bombers are at present thus equipped Arnold was quoted as saying.

The President vetoed a navy promotion and retirement bill today, because, he said, the "extremely difficult and uncertain status of international relations" made unwise the mandatory retirement of rear admirals and general officers of the marine corps.

The bill's stated purpose was to create a quicker flow of promotion for younger men.

Tawes made a special appeal for Democrats to vote, asserting that "the great mass of the people who are not particularly interested in political factions" will have "to renominate and reelect Senator Radclie."

Radclieff, he said is a senator "who represents in Washington the things that are truly Maryland. We have a senator who is equipped by environment, education, and experience to serve the people of his state and the people of his country."

Keeping silent on the third term question, the chief executive propounded several queries to candidates as to how they would balance the budget and whether they would abandon any New Deal social welfare project.

He then added:

"I recognize the horrid dilemma that questions of this kind are going to put certain types of candidates into the coming six months."

Asks "Real" Question

He said the real, honest and fundamental question on election day, no mater who the presidential nominees are, is going to be this:

"Do you wish to employ for your bus line chauffeurs who wrecked the previous bus line by driving the old buses into the ditch or by going to sleep at the wheel—or are you going to continue the present policy of employing active, wide-awake chauffeurs who are inspired with the thought that their duty is to be polite to the passengers and see to it that they reach their destination in comfort and complete safety."

Charges Announced

Charleston, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—Adjutant General William L. Hornor announced today the disbandment of the medical detachment of the first battalion, 150th infantry, at Charleston and its transfer to Huntington.

First Lieutenant Harry A. Carney has been transferred to Huntington and will continue to be assigned to the detail, Hornor said.

American Dispute With Mexico over Oil Partially Settled

Washington, May 3. (AP)—A partial settlement of the long and bitter dispute over Mexico's seizure of American oil lands was reported tonight from Mexico City and the report seemed to be confirmed by developments here.

Dispatches from Mexico City said that the Consolidated Oil Company (Sinclair) had reached a settlement with the Mexican government.

The Sinclair properties were among the American lands expropriated on March 18, 1938. In the long dispute that followed, the American companies sought return of the oil fields or prompt compensation.

In Washington, Jesus Silva Herzog, general manager of the Mexican Petroleum Distribution Agency, announced he had concluded contracts with three United States companies for sale of Mexican Petroleum products. The contracts would amount, he said, to an aggregate of $54,000,000 spread over four or five years.

Some time ago Secretary of State Hull urged Mexico to arbitrate the whole oil expropriation issue. The Mexican reply has been delivered in Washington and is being decoded and translated for publication Sunday morning. It is understood that Mexico has rejected the idea of arbitration, flatly.

"Drys" Win Election At North East, Md.

North East, Md., May 3 (AP)—This community's "wet and dry" battle was settled, temporarily, at least, today when the "drys"—opponents of a proposed municipal water system—defeated the "wets" 291 to 256 in a special election.

The issue was whether the community would issue $55,000 in bonds for the project. Approximately $23,000 more would have been provided by the federal government under the proposal.

A total of 650 voters were eligible for today's election.

The wet-dry issue has been a town topic for months, marked by court skirmishing and other maneuvers by the contesting factions.

Communist Editor Guilty of Libel

New York, May 3 (AP)—Clarence Hathaway, editor of the Communist daily worker, was convicted of criminal libel tonight by a special panel jury which deliberated 6½ hours.

The indictment on which he was tried grew out of charges by Mrs. Edith Liggett, widow of Walter Liggett, slain Minneapolis editor, that she and the memory of her husband were defamed by articles appearing in the Communist newspaper.

Hathaway, 46, is liable to a one-year prison term.

Polly Peabody

A worker with the American-Scandinavian Field Hospital, Polly Peabody, 22, of New York City, was in Namsos, Norway, while German airmen rained incendiary and high explosive bombs on the town then flew low to machine-gun refugees. She reports that little but charred ruins remain of the landing port for the British.

Germans Massing In Balkan Area

Budapest, May 4 (Saturday) (AP)—Czech refuges arriving here today declared that German mechanized troops in large numbers are concentrated in Slovakia along the Hungarian border at points from which they could make a quick dash into the Balkans.

It was reported also that more than 100,000 "lightning troops" were concentrated at Bruck on the Vienna-Budapest railway line, that three army corps were at Krakow, German-occupied Poland, and large forces were massed at Klagenfurt, Austria, near the Yugoslav border.

Sen. Tydings Urges Support of Radcliffe

Westminster, Md., May 3 (AP)—An appeal for support of Senator George L. Radcliffe, campaigning for the Democratic senatorial nomination, was voiced tonight by Radcliffe's colleague and campaign manager, Senator Millard E. Tydings, at a rally in the armory.

Senator Tydings declared Radcliffe's opponent, Howard Bruce, had offered no criticism of Radcliffe's record and described Bruce as a man "without legislative experience."

"And remember," he added, "the next six years are likely to be as critical as any we have ever faced. For that, you need an able senator, and one with proper legislative experience."

Senator Radcliffe will tour Carroll county tomorrow, arriving at nearby Sykesville in the morning and visiting rural sections throughout the remainder of the day.

Tonight's rally was arranged by Truman B. Cash, chairman of the Carroll County Democratic Central Committee.

Haakon Reported On British Ship For North Norway

Whereabouts of King and His Government a Mystery

London, May 3 (AP)—King Haakon of Norway was reported tonight to have left an undisclosed Norwegian port aboard a British warship with British troops for the northern front of Norway.

The Daily Mail's diplomatic correspondent, Wilson Broadbent, said the Norwegian monarch could not be sought refuge in London but that "he preferred to remain with his government and the British forces which have taken up new positions around Narvik."

Stockholm, May 3 (AP)—The whereabouts of King Haakon and the Norwegian government remained obscure tonight.

The king, after watching his country yield to modern warfare from some secret mountain fastness was reported, without confirmation, to have embarked from some western port.

Sweden's foreign office declared that the royal family had entered this country.

Commander

from all the center of the country left them with a grip upon Norway only in the far northern section about Narvik, the German-held iron ore port.

Whether some of the troops withdrawn from central Norway would go there was in doubt—(one British officer said they were going to England")—but in any event the war in neutral Norway was finished.

All fighting was reported stopped.

The British and their French "blue devil" supporters pulled out of the Steinkjer-Namsos front, up to 100 miles north of Germany-occupied Trondheim, leaving behind entrenchments, supplies and equipped, hopelessly outflanked Norwegians. Then they sailed away in their ships.

If Colonel Getz can be believed they did this without even telling the Norwegians and hence ruining his line of retreat northward along the railway and motor road to Mosjoen, some eighty miles away.

At Narvik, the Arctic ore port which the Allies have ringed—about 300 miles north of Namsos—British and French, apparently expect reinforcements, preliminary to starting a push from three directions on the town. German forces still are holding out at Narvik and even there, are reported in dispatches to be showing signs of going on defensive action in an effort to break the siege.

German bombers also have been concentrated now to the Narvik area and are described as active.

News of the Allied departure from Steinkjer and Namsos came suddenly and stunningly, on the twenty-fourth day of Norway's invasion.

The world already knew of the withdrawal of the British expeditionary force, in the face of German air superiority, from the Andalsnes foothold 100 miles southwest of Trondheim.

Before then, even, the Germans were holding all of southern Norway, had hammered a line of communication from Oslo all the way to Trondheim, where a Nazi landing force had taken possession at the start of the campaign.

French Abandon Namsos

But it had been presumed that the British troops from Andalsnes would go to Namsos and that the British and the French Alpine chasseurs who were with them in Norway would try to form a line across the country above Trondheim, from coast to the Swedish border.

Instead, it became known today that the French began moving out of Namsos Wednesday night under the British—under heavy German plane attack—Thursday night.

The bomb-pocked streets of Namsos were filled all Thursday with troops marching to the docks, one correspondents who got their story across the border only today.

They were taken out to six troop ships, guarded by destroyers, which lay at anchor in the fjord.

"A German bomb dropped on one destroyer, killing thirty and wounding sixty," said one Swedish correspondent.

On the Steinkjer front, the Germans were expected at any time.

The British had suffered heavily there—a whole battalion was cut up by a Nazi company ten days ago. The main factor in stemming the German advance, since then, has been the valiant defense by Norwegian troops.

But now the Norwegians' fight seems hopeless.

The Norwegians themselves, with scarcely enough ammunition for 15 minutes of heavy firing, are being encircled.

By EDWARD KENNEDY

Athens, May 3. (AP)—Arrival of a British-French battle fleet in Alexandria and reports of large-scale Italian naval, air and army concentrations in the Dodecanese islands switched southeastern Europe's anxiety over possible spread of the war sharply to Greece tonight.

Athens, itself was calm, but alert.

In Turkey, the Allied fleet's arrival at its Egyptian base was greeted as new evidence that Britain and France are determined to fulfill their obligations in the near-east, which include a mutual assistance treaty with Turkey and guarantees of the independence of both Greece and Rumania.

There was no outward show of belief either in Greece or Turkey that war is imminent, but both countries pursued their defense preparations.

Reports received in diplomatic quarters of Italian reinforcements in the Dodecanese remained without official confirmation but generally were given credence.

Tension in Yugoslavia, which had diminished a little with Italian diplomatic assurances of the past few days that there was no reason to fear an Italian thrust, became more acute as a result of the Mediterranean activities.

However, all of southeastern Europe was too wearied by recurrent war scares to show much emotion.

In Turkey, five more Germans were arrested on suspicion of spying and propaganda-spreading. In Ankara, it was reported Hitler had sent for his ambassador, Franz von Papen.

Loss of Most

mission" was heard there for the first time.

Evidence that the British plan was to transfer at least some troops to other Norwegian areas was seen, however, in a statement issued tonight to this effect:

"Major General Paget, in his plan for the evacuation of Anadalsnes, proposed to transfer with the British forces all the Norwegian troops which the Norwegian high command decided could best be employed in other areas. The necessary instructions were given to accede to this request but it is not known yet in London how many have in fact thus been transferred."

Britains struck by air at Nazi bases at Ry, Denmark, Fornebu, near Oslo, and Stavanger and the admiralty flashed a "we are proud of our fleet air arm."

These failed, however, to divert London from the crux of the situation—further withdrawals from Norway.

Law Backs Davies

Adding his voice to Davies, Richard K. Law, member of Parliament for staunchly conservative Hull, opened fire on the government "attitude to the problem" which he said "must be changed before the country is in sight of victory."

This son of Bonar Law, who the Conservative party under Asquith derided "widespread and highly dangerous delusions that the war is going to win itself without loss or sacrifice, that time is on our side and that Hitler has missed the bus."

The "miss the bus" 'phrase is from Chamberlain's April 4 speech and already has been thrown in his face by Liberal Leader Sir Archibald Sinclair.

Thus for the first time since the start of the war members of Parliament themselves showed there were signs of rebellion against Chamberlain his own Conservative party.

This is highly important, since neither Labor nor the opposition Liberals have enough votes to overthrow the government and any change must come with connivance of members of the government ranks.

Informed sources believed tonight that unless a signal victory for British arms is announced before next Tuesday the fate of Chamberlain and his government hangs on statements then by the Prime Minister and Churchill and the debate which is to follow.

ner, and the Bureau of Criminal Investigation for which a commander has not yet been selected.

Assisting Lieutenant Ridgely will be first sergeants W. H. Weber and Frederick Barnickol. Weber was promoted from sergeant. Barnickol formerly was the only officer on the force with the rank of first sergeant. Assisting Conner will be Sergeant-Major George E. Carlson.

Conner's administrative bureau will include the quartermaster division and communications.

Colonel Ober emphasized that the new organization was not a "military setup" but followed recommendations of the International Association of Chiefs of Police. Personnel and organization experts worked on the plans for more than four months, he added.

Youth and Girl Found Murdered

Stockton, Calif., May 3. (AP)—A Stockton youth and his girl companion, their throats cut and their arms and legs trussed, were found dead in a field today.

Nathan Chinchiolo, 23, member of a well-known Stockton family, and Dorothy Woofter, 19, of nearby Tracy, disappeared Sunday. Worried parents reported their absence next day.

Monday night the automobile in which they were last seen was found abandoned in Fresno, 100 miles away, with a bloodstain on the seat and a window broken.

Chinchiolo had been bound with a belt from the girl's coat and with straps of its lining. He had been gagged. Miss Woofter's hands were tied behind her back.

Dr. Orrin Fry, general autopsy surgeon of the San Joaquin general hospital, said death was caused by the throat wounds.

Swedes Expect No Help from the Allies If They Are Attacked

Stockholm, May 3. (AP)—Swedes in general tonight subscribed to this belief, expressed following the Allied withdrawals from Norway by the newspaper Tidningen:

"It seems as if the search for a battlefield has been resumed; as if Norway had been given up as being too difficult, to be replaced by the Mediterranean . . . Neutrals have again been told they must rely on themselves, if threatened."

Searching Party Finds Boy's Body

Hagerstown, Md., May 3 (AP) — A searching party today found the body of Stanley R. Barney, 16, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., who was drowned in the Potomac river below Hancock April 17.

Walter Culp, a member of the searching party, located the body lodged against a submerged tree about a mile below the spot where the boat in which Barney was fishing with his brother, S. T. Barney, 21, capsized in the swollen river.

The body of the elder youth has not been found.

Delbert Stotler, also of Berkeley Springs, who was in the boat with the Barney brothers, swam safely ashore after the boat capsized.

German news agency, said there was increased fighting in the Narvik region, that in the Steinkjer region north of Trondheim there was "lively reconnaissance activity," and that in western and southern Norway "the situation x x x can generally be designated as pacified."

Following the regular high command communique, containing claims to blows against Allied sea power, DNB reported that 135 units of the British fleet had been put out of action since April 9, the day the Norwegian invasion started.

Foreign office sources charged Chamberlain with "plans for widening the area of combat" because of the sending of a battle fleet to Alexandria and asked whether Rumania, Greece or Yugoslavia was to be "the next victim."

"After his catastrophic defeat in Norway," they added, "Churchill (British First Lord of Admiralty Winston Churchill) is yearning for vengeance.

"He will try to equalize his defeat by success elsewhere, but we are forewarned and ready."

INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

Reported Franco-British evacuation of all Norway except for a foothold at Narvik heightens the gloom with which Allied sympathizers await more complete revelation of what that abrupt about-face means.

London spokesmen back up Prime Minister Chamberlain's assertion that the fight for Norway will go on. Yet Allied withdrawal of the forces landed north of Trondheim as well as those south of the city could have only one significance.

It must mean that the war in Norway from now on will be war in the air only. Norway appears destined to become a cockpit for rival Nazi and British air fighters. Days and nights of ceaseless terror lie ahead for Norwegian communities adjacent to actual or potential air fields or U-boat bases.

Predict Use of Airfields

The Allied high command faces the imminent danger that Germany will employ Norwegian-Danish airfields, harbors and fjords for large scale air and submarine attacks on North sea shipping. The only recourse seems to be to concentrate British air attack on every such target.

Claims of London spokesmen, including Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, that the Allied naval convoy system has already "mastered" Germany's air, submarine and mine attack, are due for another test. Failure of Allied air fighters to prevent German use of Scandinavian bases to bring the attack closer home to Britain's ship lanes and east coast ports would be a graver matter than the Trondheim defeat.

Nor can it be doubted that in some measure the virtual cessation during the Norwegian campaign of Nazi destruction of Allied and neutral shipping in the North Sea represented a German air and naval concentration on swift completion of the Scandinavian stroke. Allied withdrawal from all of Norway but Narvik means quick release of German air power to resume the sea raiding.

Ruthless War Predicted

The war in Norway must go on ruthlessly by air, at least, if that new upsurge of German attack at sea is to be countered effectively. That, presumably, is the meaning of Chamberlain's declaration that the Norwegian front had not been abandoned or become a "sideshow" of the war. It is a grim forecast for Norway and Denmark, ground between the Allied-German war millstones as helpless and unwilling victims of the struggle.

If the Allied operations in neutral Norway have in fact been scaled down to only air warfare, the Narvik adventure has lost much of its original value from an Allied standpoint. It has choked off any German use of that route for movement of Swedish iron ore to Germany; but the Baltic route via Sweden's port of Lulea will be ice free within weeks if not days. Narvik will be unimportant to Germany until winter comes again, unless Sweden is drawn into the war.

There seems little Allied salvage value about the retreat from Norway. Every consideration urges upon Franco-British leadership some drastic move to counter quickly for that setback. Increasing Allied pressure on Italy to disclose her real intentions in the struggle points strongly to the Mediterranean as the theater where London and Paris hope to retrieve Allied prestige.

Line Drive Injures Cleveland Player

Washington, May 3 (AP)—A line drive in batting practice today fractured every bone in the left cheek of Oscar Grimes, Cleveland Indian utility infielder, physicians reported tonight.

Dr. E. W. Meloy operated upon Grimes and expressed belief his eyesight would not be impaired. He estimated Grimes might not be able to play baseball for two months.

If the ball had struck an inch higher the infielder would have been killed, Dr. Meloy said.

Grimes has been playing first base in place of Hal Trosky who was called home by his son's illness.

Loudspeaker Insults Start Sharp Fighting On the Rhine Front

Basle, Switzerland, May 3 (AP)—French and German soldiers got so worked up over an exchange of loudspeaker insults from one line to the other that the nearest thing to a battle yet staged on the Rhine front continued for an hour tonight.

It started when the broadcaster on a German musical program which entertains the French through a loudspeaker departed from the usual insults to the British and compliments to the French to brag about the German victory in Norway.

This so excited the French broadcaster that he made uncomplimentary references about Adolf Hitler.

For an hour thereafter the whole sector north of Basle resounded with rifle, machine-gun and heavy artillery fire.

Military observers estimated that at least $50,000 worth of ammunition was used up by both sides — and they doubted whether anyone in Germany's west wall or France's Maginot line even had been wounded.

Bullets Damage American Ships

Officers and Crew Disagree as to Which Side Fired upon Her

New York, May 3. (AP)—The little American freighter Flying Fish, her deck plates pitted by bullets as mementoes of the German-British battle for Bergen, returned home today with master and crew in sharp dispute as to which side had fired upon her.

All agreed, however, that the bullets which struck the Flying Fish and another American vessel, the Charles R. McCormick — cutting away the latter's mast stays and wire rigging—had been fired either by accident or by mistakes in the identities of the targets.

Speaking for fifteen fellow seamen, George Gilbert declared unequivocally that it was an Allied plane that, on April 12, loosed three bursts of machinegun fire upon the hapless Flying Fish, making her maiden voyage.

Captain W. W. Wollaston insisted, just as flatly, that his ship was struck accidentally by shells from a Norwegian land battery which had been seized by the invading Germans.

Aside from the controversy between skipper and men the Flying Fish brought back news that the Germans in Bergen had taken over 650 tons of fish oil—used in lubricating guns—which had been taken there by the Flying Fish as part of her cargo.

American Defense Program Changes by Developments Abroad

Washington, May 3, (AP) — President Roosevelt reported today that the European air and sea war had dictated changes in American defense weapons but that the changes did not necessitate any delay in carrying out the current program for a stronger army and navy.

Almost simultaneously members of Congress heard from Major General Henry H. Arnold, chief of the air corps, that 1,900 new first-line fighting planes the army expects to have in service fourteen months hence will be fully equipped with improvements developed by the war.

Members of a Senate Appropriations subcommittee before whom Arnold testified said these improvements include self-sealing fuel tanks, bullet-proof windshields, armor, and harder-hitting guns. Only fifty-two bombers are at present thus equipped Arnold was quoted as saying.

The President vetoed a navy promotion and retirement bill today because, he said, the "extremely difficult and uncertain status of international relations" made unwise the mandatory retirement of rear admirals and general officers of the marine corps.

The bill's stated purpose was to create a quicker flow of promotion for younger men.

to the public that his temperament is exactly the opposite of that of his opponent."

Tawes made a special appeal for Democrats to vote, asserting that "the great mass of the people who are not particularly interested in political factions" will have "to renominate and reelect Senator Radclie."

Radclieff, he said is a senator "who represents in Washington the things that are truly Maryland. We have a senator who is equipped by environment, education, and experience to serve the people of his state and the people of his country."

Keeping silent on the third term question, the chief executive propounded several queries to candidates as to how they would balance the budget and whether they would abandon any New Deal social welfare project.

He then added:

"I recognize the horrid dilemma that questions of this kind are going to put certain types of candidates into the coming six months."

Asks "Real" Question

He said the real, honest and fundamental question on election day, no mater who the presidential nominees are, is going to be this:

"Do you wish to employ for your bus line chauffeurs who wrecked the previous bus line by driving the old buses into the ditch or by going to sleep at the wheel—or are you going to continue the present policy of employing active, wide-awake chauffeurs who are inspired with the thought that their duty is to be polite to the passengers and see to it that they reach their destination in comfort and complete safety."

Charges Announced

Charleston, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—Adjutant General William L. Hornor announced today the disbandment of the medical detachment of the first battalion, 150th infantry, at Charleston and its transfer to Huntington.

First Lieutenant Harry A. Carney has been transferred to Huntington and will continue to be assigned to the detail, Hornor said.

it surveyed its handiwork in its entirety and found it bad.

A roll-call vote of 211 to 171 undid all that had been done and rejected the amendments as a whole. A second vote, 205 to 175, recommitted the entire subject to the House Labor Committee for further study and recommendations.

No Action This Session

Under the prevailing situation, leaders had no expectation that the committee could complete its work in time for action before the session's scheduled June adjournment.

The result was both a victory and a defeat for administration leaders in Congress. The latter had vigorously opposed the sweeping amendments which were written into the bill in the course of the debate. Their victory lay in the fact that in the end these amendments were rejected.

But, the administration forces had endorsed a series of milder changes, most of them proposed by the wage-hour administration itself. Chairman Norton (D-NJ) and her colleagues of the Labor Committee made a last minute effort to obtain approval of these by opposing the motion to recommit—but lost.

Near Riot in House

Today's discussion was of a piece with the debate which had gone before. Rep. Parsons (D-Ill), presiding, beat an almost constant tattoo with his gavel in an effort to maintain order.

One speaker who was heard, however, was Rep. McCormack (D-Mass).

"This is the most disgraceful spectacle I have seen in my twelve years in the House," he shouted. "This is not a Congress but a chaotic group of men."

No one disputed his remarks.

American Dispute With Mexico over Oil Partially Settled

Washington, May 3. (AP)—A partial settlement of the long and bitter dispute over Mexico's seizure of American oil lands was reported tonight from Mexico City and the report seemed to be confirmed by developments here.

Dispatches from Mexico City said that the Consolidated Oil Company (Sinclair) had reached a settlement with the Mexican government.

The Sinclair properties were among the American lands expropriated on March 18, 1938. In the long dispute that followed, the American companies sought return of the oil fields or prompt compensation.

In Washington, Jesus Silva Herzog, general manager of the Mexican Petroleum Distribution Agency, announced he had concluded contracts with three United States companies for sale of Mexican Petroleum products. The contracts would amount, he said, to an aggregate of $54,000,000 spread over four or five years.

Some time ago Secretary of State Hull urged Mexico to arbitrate the whole oil expropriation issue. The Mexican reply has been delivered in Washington and is being decoded and translated for publication Sunday morning. It is understood that Mexico has rejected the idea of arbitration, flatly.

"Drys" Win Election At North East, Md.

North East, Md., May 3 (AP)—This community's "wet and dry" battle was settled, temporarily, at least, today when the "drys"—opponents of a proposed municipal water system—defeated the "wets" 291 to 256 in a special election.

The issue was whether the community would issue $55,000 in bonds for the project. Approximately $23,000 more would have been provided by the federal government under the proposal.

A total of 650 voters were eligible for today's election.

The wet-dry issue has been a town topic for months, marked by court skirmishing and other maneuvers by the contesting factions.

Communist Editor Guilty of Libel

New York, May 3 (AP)—Clarence Hathaway, editor of the Communist daily worker, was convicted of criminal libel tonight by a special panel jury which deliberated 6½ hours.

The indictment on which he was tried grew out of charges by Mrs. Edith Liggett, widow of Walter Liggett, slain Minneapolis editor, that she and the memory of her husband were defamed by articles appearing in the Communist newspaper.

Hathaway, 46, is liable to a one-year prison term.

Polly Peabody

A worker with the American-Scandinavian Field Hospital, Polly Peabody, 22, of New York City, was in Namsos, Norway, while German airmen rained incendiary and high explosive bombs on the town then flew low to machine-gun refugees. She reports that little but charred ruins remain of the landing port for the British.

Germans Massing In Balkan Area

Budapest, May 4 (Saturday) (AP)—Czech refuges arriving here today declared that German mechanized troops in large numbers are concentrated in Slovakia along the Hungarian border at points from which they could make a quick dash into the Balkans.

It was reported also that more than 100,000 "lightning troops" were concentrated at Bruck on the Vienna-Budapest railway line, that three army corps were at Krakow, German-occupied Poland, and large forces were massed at Klagenfurt, Austria, near the Yugoslav border.

Sen. Tydings Urges Support of Radcliffe

Westminster, Md., May 3 (AP)—An appeal for support of Senator George L. Radcliffe, campaigning for the Democratic senatorial nomination, was voiced tonight by Radcliffe's colleague and campaign manager, Senator Millard E. Tydings, at a rally in the armory.

Senator Tydings declared Radcliffe's opponent, Howard Bruce, had offered no criticism of Radcliffe's record and described Bruce as a man "without legislative experience."

"And remember," he added, "the next six years are likely to be as critical as any we have ever faced. For that, you need an able senator, and one with proper legislative experience."

Senator Radcliffe will tour Carroll county tomorrow, arriving at nearby Sykesville in the morning and visiting rural sections throughout the remainder of the day.

Tonight's rally was arranged by Truman B. Cash, chairman of the Carroll County Democratic Central Committee.

Haakon Reported On British Ship For North Norway

Whereabouts of King and His Government a Mystery

London, May 3 (AP)—King Haakon of Norway was reported tonight to have left an undisclosed Norwegian port aboard a British warship with British troops for the northern front of Norway.

The Daily Mail's diplomatic correspondent, Wilson Broadbent, said the Norwegian monarch could have sought refuge in London but instead "he preferred to remain with his government and the British forces which have taken up new positions around Narvik."

Stockholm, May 3 (AP)—The whereabouts of King Haakon and the Norwegian government remained obscure tonight.

The king, after watching the country yield to modern warfare from some secret mountain fastness, was reported, without confirmation, to have embarked from some western port.

Sweden's foreign office denied that the royal family had entered this country.

from all the center of the country left them with a grip upon Norway only in the far northern sector about Narvik, the German-held iron ore port.

Whether some of the troops withdrawn from central Norway would go there was in doubt—(one British officer said they were going to England")—but in any event the war in neutral Norway was finished.

All fighting was reported stopped.

The British and their French "blue devil" supporters pulled out of the Steinkjer-Namsos front, 100 miles north of German occupied Trondheim, leaving behind entrenchments, supplies and equipped, hopelessly outflanked Norwegians. Then they sailed away in their ships.

If Colonel Getz can be believed they did this without even telling the Norwegians and hence ruined his line of retreat northward along the railway and motor road to Mosjoen, some eighty miles away.

At Narvik, the Arctic ore port which the Allies have ringed—some 300 miles north of Namsos—the British and French, apparently expect reinforcements, preliminary to starting a push from three directions on the town. German forces still are holding out at Narvik and even there, are reported in some advices to be showing signs of going on defensive action in an effort to hold out the siege.

German bombers also have penetrated now to the Narvik area and are described as active.

News of the Allied departure from Steinkjer and Namsos came suddenly and stunningly, on the twenty-fourth day of Norway's invasion.

The world already knew of the withdrawal of the British expeditionary force, in the face of German air superiority, from Andalsnes foothold 100 miles southwest of Trondheim.

Before then, even, the Germans, holding all of southern Norway, hammered a line of communication from Oslo all the way to Trondheim, where a Nazi landing force took possession at the start of the campaign.

French Abandon Namsos

But it had been presumed that the British troops from Andalsnes would go to Namsos and that the British and the French Alpine chasseurs who were with them there would try to form a line across the country above Trondheim, from coast to the Swedish border.

Instead, it became known today that the French began moving out of Namsos Wednesday night and that the British—under heavy German plane attack—Thursday night.

The bomb-pocked streets of Namsos were filled all Thursday with troops marching to the docks, the correspondents who got their story across the border only today.

They were taken out to six transships, guarded by destroyers, which lay at anchor in the fjord.

"A German bomb dropped on one destroyer, killing thirty and wounding sixty," said one Swedish correspondent.

On the Steinkjer front, the Germans were expected at any time.

The British had suffered heavily there—a whole battalion was cut up by a Nazi company ten days ago. The main factor in stemming the German advance, since then, has been the valiant defense by Norwegian troops.

But now the Norwegians' fight seems hopeless.

The Norwegians themselves, with scarcely enough ammunition for 10 minutes of heavy firing, are being encircled.

Rose Fever Is Often Caused by Grass Pollens

Some Persons Who Have the Disease Refer to It as "My Spring Cold"

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

It is called "rose fever" because it comes when the roses are blooming. Some people have it and some people don't. Some of those who have it refer to it as "my spring cold."

It was not until John Bostock, the Englishman, experimented on his own case that the guilty parties were found not to be the roses, but the grasses. John Bostock published his observations over 100 years ago, but nobody paid any attention to them until just lately.

It is natural for the rose fever victim to ascribe his trouble to the roses because when he smells the roses he is liable to get an attack. But this is merely because the sticky petals and stamens of the rose hold the wind-blown pollen of the grasses, and when the victim is even in the room with the roses, the effluvia affects the mucous membrane of his nose.

Grasses Responsible

The grasses which are responsible and the time of their blooming are as follows:

May 17—blue grass; May 17—rye; May 27—orchard grass; May 27—wheat; June 15—timothy; June 20—cattail; July 1-30—corn.

The treatment may be either palliative or preventive. By palliative treatment is meant the treatment of symptoms by nasal sprays and eye drops. This we will deal with in an article later on in the season when symptoms are likely to be acute.

Preventive treatment consists in the use of pollen vaccines. It should start some time before the season begins. That is why I am drawing attention to it now.

The procedure as carried out by the modern doctor who is interested in allergy is to determine exactly what grass the victim is sensitive to. The principle upon which this diagnosis rests is that the skin is very senstive to the chemicals of the pollen, and when a solution of the pollen is made and injected into the skin, or rubbed into the skin, there will be a red and inflammatory area of considerable size. Several different pollens are rubbed in at the same time and the ones which show the largest wheal are those against which treatment is directed.

Preventive Treatment

After the offending pollen is identified, hypodermic injections of weak dilutions of the pollen solution are made, growing stronger every week so that finally by the time the season opens, the patient will have acquired an immunity and can get through the season with little or no discomfort.

It is possible to give this preventive treatment co-seasonally, that is, beginning at the time the symptoms begin. My own experience has been that this vaccine treatment is more effective to use against the spring type of hay fever than against the fall or ragweed type.

Doctor Vaughan, of Richmond, believes that 80 per cent of patients receive adequate relief with co-seasonal treatment and 85 per cent with pre-seasonal treatment. By adequate relief is meant the disappearance of 75 per cent of symptoms.

Today's GARDEN-GRAPH

By DEAN HALLIDAY

Control of peony blight

The average small garden is scarcely large enough to devote to peony borders, or plantings of peonies alone. For lack of space many small gardens do not even contain peony plantings. In other small gardens peonies are included in the hardy border, or relegated to the background by being placed in among shrub plantings.

Peony foliage does take up a lot of space, but since the peony roots do not occupy the same amount of space as the foliage, one can use what one gardener calls "plus plantings" around peonies.

As shown in today's Garden-Graph, peonies should be planted three feet apart. The foliage may cover the space between the plants, but the roots will not use all this area. This gives ample space to plant early bulbs between the peonies. The bulbs will bloom while the peony foliage is just beginning to make growth. Later the peony foliage will conceal the dying bulb foliage.

For later "plus blooms" after the peonies have flowered, lilies and gladiolus can be planted about the peonies. The lilies, in particular, will enjoy the coolness of the ground where it is shaded by the peony foliage.

Rose Fever Is Often Caused by Grass Pollens

Some Persons Who Have the Disease Refer to It as "My Spring Cold"

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

It is called "rose fever" because it comes when the roses are blooming. Some people have it and some people don't. Some of those who have it refer to it as "my spring cold."

It was not until John Bostock, the Englishman, experimented on his own case that the guilty parties were found not to be the roses, but the grasses. John Bostock published his observations over 100 years ago, but nobody paid any attention to them until just lately.

It is natural for the rose fever victim to ascribe his trouble to the roses because when he smells the roses he is liable to get an attack. But this is merely because the sticky petals and stamens of the rose hold the wind-blown pollen of the grasses. And when the victim is even in the room with the roses, the effluvia affects the mucous membrane of his nose.

Grasses Responsible

The grasses which are responsible and the time of their blooming are as follows:

May 17—blue grass; May 17—rye; May 27—orchard grass; May 7—wheat; June 15—timothy; June 0—cattail; July 1-30—corn.

The treatment may be either palliative or preventive. By palliative treatment is meant the treatment of symptoms by nasal sprays and eye drops. This we will deal with in an article later on in the season when symptoms are likely to be acute.

Preventive treatment consists in the use of pollen vaccines. It should start some time before the season begins. That is why I am drawing attention to it now.

The procedure as carried out by the modern doctor who is interested in allergy is to determine exactly what grass the victim is sensitive to. The principle upon which this diagnosis rests is that the skin is very senstive to the chemicals of the pollen, and when a solution of the pollen is made and injected into the skin, or rubbed into the skin, there will be a red and inflammatory area of considerable size. Several different pollens are rubbed in at the same time and the ones which show the largest wheal are those against which treatment is directed.

Preventive Treatment

After the offending pollen is identified, hypodermic injections of weak dilutions of the pollen solution are made, growing stronger every week so that finally by the time the season opens, the patient will have acquired an immunity and can get through the season with little or no discomfort.

It is possible to give this preventive treatment co-seasonally, that is, beginning at the time the symptoms begin. My own experience has been that this vaccine treatment is more effective to use against the spring type of hay fever than against the fall or ragweed type.

Doctor Vaughan, of Richmond, believes that 80 per cent of patients receive adequate relief with co-seasonal treatment and 85 per cent with pre-seasonal treatment. By adequate relief is meant the disappearance of 75 per cent of symptoms.

Today's GARDEN-GRAPH

By DEAN HALLIDAY

Control of peony blight

The average small garden is scarcely large enough to devote to peony borders, or plantings of peonies alone. For lack of space many small gardens do not even contain peony plantings. In other small gardens peonies are included in the hardy border, or relegated to the background by being placed in among shrub plantings.

Peony foliage does take up a lot of space, but since the peony roots do not occupy the same amount of space as the foliage, one can use what one gardener calls "plus plantings" around peonies.

As shown in today's Garden-Graph, peonies should be planted three feet apart. The foliage may cover the space between the plants, but the roots will not use all this area. This gives ample space to plant early bulbs between the peonies. The bulbs will bloom while the peony foliage is just beginning to make growth. Later the peony foliage will conceal the dying bulb foliage.

For later "plus blooms" after the peonies have flowered, lilies and gladiolus can be planted about the peonies. The lilies, in particular, will enjoy the coolness of the ground where it is shaded by the peony foliage.

Economic Aspect of the War Still an Important Factor

RECENT MILITARY REVERSES for the Allies in Norway have served to obscure the economic aspect of the big war. This, however, is not by any means an inconsequential factor, which may have telling effect at no distant time.

While losses in sea engagements have apparently been considerable, the Allies insist, with a tone of confidence, that control of the seas remains with them, that the Nazi navy has been diminished to impotent strength and that they are thus allowed to divert warships to other areas.

The Nazis undoubtedly have suffered heavy losses of their war reserves in the prosecution of their Norwegian blitzkrieg. They have been obliged to expend great quantities of oils, gasolines, explosives and other supplies, while the much-needed ore supplies of the north are still cut off. Thus, if the Allied blockade has had any appreciable effect, and the indications are that it has had, the Nazis will likely be forced to new quick and desperate efforts to make the most of their war machine. It is doubtless for this reason that the expectation obtains of a new thrust by the Nazis either through the Netherlands or Belgium, or, what late moves seem more to indicate, somewhere in southeastern Europe, to cope with which the Allies have amassed huge fleets and large armies nearby.

We are reminded that trying moments are not unfamiliar to the British and that they have before experienced cabinet shake-ups in the midst of war. But such things would seem to emphasize more than anything else a unity of the British people rather than disunity or demoralization, as they reflect a demand for more vigorous prosecution of the war effort.

In view of these factors, discussion of plans by boasting Nazi leaders of what Germany is to do after the war seems a little premature.

War Picture Changes May Affect Trade

TREMENDOUS AND FAR-REACHING CHANGES are imminent in the European war picture, a picture that is pretty well blurred and full of uncertainties.

Decision of the British government to divert its shipping from the Mediterranean is one of them and it will naturally affect the trade of the United States. Should Italy go into the war beside Germany, the whole Mediterranean would have to be proclaimed a combat area, forbidden to American shipping. In that event practically all of the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa would become involved. This would leave, of all the great nations, only the ports of Japan open to American shipping.

Such a prospect, however, is not as alarming as some war jingoists might estimate. This country is pretty well self-contained and could get along fairly well, not only by reliance upon its own resources but those also of other countries of the western hemisphere. Also considerable foreign shipping could be retained although rerouted longer distances.

There is little use of crossing bridges before they are reached, of course, but sometimes they can be sighted ahead and due preparations made. But the war situation is in such a flux and the scenes are changing so rapidly that what seems to be one certain bridge to cross may turn out to be not the one at all.

Some Statistics on Steel Hit Frontier Argument

HOUSEWIVES of the nation bought more than 400,000 net tons of steel last year through their purchases of kitchen ranges, refrigerators and washing machines, thereby creating the equivalent of full-time employment for nearly 10,000 men in the plants of the steel industry, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute.

In addition, their purchases provided still more jobs in the manufacture of the refrigerators, ranges and washing machines themselves.

During 1939 more than 5,217,000 refrigerators, ranges and washing machines were produced, a total of thirty-five per cent above the 1938 production of 3,863,000 units but about twenty-two per cent below the 1937 peak of 5,691,000.

About 201,000 tons of steel were consumed in the gas and electric refrigerators produced last year, while an additional 159,000 tons of steel went into the kitchen ranges produced last year.

Approximately 41,000 tons of steel were used last year in the production of washing machines.

This cannot be taken as indicating that our frontiers have vanished and that industrial America has no place to go.

Where a Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing

FOR MANY DECADES, literacy has been one of the criteria by which nations have been judged. To have a high literacy percentage was a badge of merit, proof of being civilized; a low mark meant something close to barbarism. During the last quarter of a century, however, confidence in this yardstick has been somewhat undermined. There is now a suspicion that the important thing is how that superior literacy is used.

Germany is a highly literate nation, but it has been responsible for two great wars which have thrust real civilization back to the dark ages. Consequently, one will be pardoned for apprehension upon reading that the percentage of literacy for the Soviet population above nine years of age has risen from fifty-one per cent in 1926 to eighty-one per cent in 1940. These figures are, of course, Moscow's.

It is obvious that the main purpose of improving the minds of the Russian peasants is to help them read and understand Soviet propaganda. If intellectual advancement goes no further than that, the next generation will be primed with Bolshevik doctrines and insulated from any idea which might disturb complacent belief in what is handed out from Moscow.

It comes down to Pope's old adage that a little learning is a dangerous thing. When there are 170,000,000 people of whom more than four-fifths can read that Stalin is omniscient, Russia all-powerful, and democratic countries all foul, without having either the capacity or the opportunity to check such statements with the truth, there exists a tremendous power for evil.

War Opposition Sentiment Big But Might Quickly Change

GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON has commented upon the general prevalence of sentiment in the nation against its participation in the European war. There is no doubt about it. Conventions everywhere are continuing to pass resolutions against it. So strong is the feeling that renewed effort is being made by the mothers of the country in a move to put through the Hamilton Fish resolution, which provides for a national referendum before there can be conscription for foreign wars. There would, perhaps, be less pressure of this kind were there not so much uncertainty about the impulsiveness of the present executive.

But Johnson sounds a warning that sentiment of this kind, however widespread and solid, can likely be changed over night in the face of eloquence and hokum and high-pressure selling, which, in the days of the World war, brought about a war psychosis bordering on hysteria.

Johnson notes that such a thing is again possible, as it doubtless is should those in charge of affairs utilize all the available agencies and sources of power to that end. There are handicaps, however, that did not obtain in the World war period, the chief being the realization of the hooking we got, along with a frustration of our high idealism. But the danger remains, nevertheless, and it is something to which the people must be alert and guard against, especially when it comes to false or misleading propaganda.

While an Italian makes a cloth of milk, an American chemist is producing ice cream from cotton. Plainly, science is on its way, and it will be interesting to see where.

German parachute troops are equipped with collapsible bicycles. The bike tires, no doubt, can be quickly converted into waterwings on the way down—if necessary.

The Browser Gets a Letter

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Marshall Maslin

Of all things! The Browser has received a flattering letter from a lady who praises him for saying that he did NOT like a book. The book was "Chad Hanna". Walter Edmonds' novel about circus days in America a century ago. The Browser thought it dull and unworthy of Mr. Edmonds and said so. So up comes a Miss Helen Thomas of Mill Valley, California who seems to read all the book review magazines—and says that "yours was the only review which dealt rightly with an inferior piece of work by a good man". (She means that she and the Browser agree).

And she asks: "How under the sun could some of those reviewers have said what they said about 'Chad Hanna' if they had read the book? Mr. Edmonds certainly didn't do for his characters in that book what he has always done before. And yet this book has received louder puffs at the start than his other, better books."

The answer is simply that the other reviewers liked "Chad Hanna" and the Browser didn't. And sometimes a second-rate book does arouse greater enthusiasm on first reading than a masterpiece. But (1) book reviewers do read the books they review. (2) Sometimes they like books because they like their authors (and vice versa). (3) Sometimes it is difficult to review a book fairly when you do know the author personally. The personal acquaintanceship gets in the way and no reviewer likes to break up a friendship merely because of a book—because the author is so precious to the reviewer as a friend. So he praises a book he doesn't admire and betrays the readers who have faith in his judgment.

Once upon a time the Browser was invited to a cocktail party to meet Irving Stone, author of "Lust for Life" and "Sailor on Horseback", two good books. He couldn't attend and did not become acquainted with Mr. Stone. . . So you see his hands are clean and he can review Mr. Stone's novel "False Witness" (Doubleday Doran) without prejudice.

It is a simple story with a grand theme—the victory of decency over evil. The events occurred in the little Mission Valley in Southern California at the turn of this century. John Annister, a lean and kindly New Englander had made that valley beautiful. He ruled it with gentle integrity. Suddenly one day a poor woman named Widow Smithers announced that someone had stolen $50 from the bottom of her flour barrel. She accused Mary Shoe, the valley's work-by-the-day woman. But Hilda Hauser, daughter of the town miser, August Hauser, had been seen coming out of the widow's cottage that day—and Hilda went to a nearby town the next day and bought a new dress to catch the eye of the young minister.

Annister fights to save the reputation of simple old Mary Shoe. Annister fights with every mean device to convict Mary and clear his daughter. Finally he takes John's farm from him and John dies. But John's brave young granddaughter fights on, establishes Mary Shoe's innocence, and preserves the decency of Mission Valley. (Comment: The theme is sound but I wouldn't recognize one of Author Stone's characters if I met him or her on the street. They are all stock fictional characters and Mr. Stone was unable to breathe life into them).

Neither does the Browser know Salvador de Madariaga, author of "Christopher Columbus" (Macmillan)—but here's a rich and fascinating life of one of the most subtle great men who ever strode across the stage of history. Incidentally de Madariaga argues that the man who discovered America was of Jewish blood. He argues precisely and persuasively and his book should become a classic among the lives of the Great Discover. Anyway, it delighted Marsh Maslin.

Golden Age Is Seen by Teacher

BY EDWIN C. HILL

Edwin C. Hill

We rush into print with the story of a thoroughly informed man who knows all the bad news and who is an optimist. He has no formulas, no conjure words, no self-hynotizing phrases and he doesn't feed on any books which chart a short-cut to the millenium. He is an historian and a teacher of history, a friend of this writer for many years. He offers you nothing out of Pittsburgh Phil's feed box, or Sibyl's cave of the winds. He says the shrewdest speculators rarely bet on inside information, but rather on what most sensible people know. He reads the signs of the time as follows:

America is now just about ready to shove into a golden age which will far surpass Italy's grand march of the fifteenth century. There will be a flowering of the arts, of science and the humanities such as man has never known before. This will come not by political devices, not by any conscious grooving or channelling of the social order, but by the fruition of creative forces, long latent in our national genius. It will be made possible not only by these innate capacities but by our isolation and our lavish abundance of national resources.

To Young People

"If you write anything about this," said my friend, "I wish you would address it particularly to young people. I am fifty years old. I served in the World War. I think I give full weight to all the doom and misery in the world today. And with all this, I can tell you from my heart that I wish I were twenty years old, to live through what I believe will surely be the world's greatest ascendancy of the human spirit, here in America.

"I believe the elders of our country should, with evangelical fervor, impress on youth the following: In all the history of the planet, the American nation—the system of government, its geography, its resources, its culture, its Bill of Rights, its creative genius—is absolutely and utterly unique. It's foundation marked a break-away from dynastic, feudal, mediaeval and pre-mediaeval darkness of more than 5,000 years duration. Every time I see a youngster I want to take him by the scruff of the neck and hammer into him a realization that this country is something different. It's news, I tell you—something 'new, strange and unexpected, 'as the dictionary defines news. If we get that into our heads, we will be less apt to turn back for one more round of the devil's broth of war and foreign imperialism."

Mistake Is Noted

In pre-Elizabethan England, there were stupid rulers and there were noisy, ignorant and rapacious pressure groups. It looked hopeless. But there was a stirring and outreach of the human spirit which blazed out in the splendors of the Elizabethan age. After the Spanish Inquisition, there was good government, for that age, in Spain, but no vitality of the mind or spirit, and the country sank back into ignorance and decay.

The point I make is that it is a mistake to diagnose a nation by its immediate political or institutional or even economic status. Its hope, and despair is the measure of its vitality, its creativeness, its diffusion of adventurous intelligence, its surge into the future. Testing America's reflexes and applying the stethoscope, any qualified social historian of today will tell you that this country is no hospital case. That's understatement, of course. We are boiling with vitality.

In Support

Specific observations support my belief that we are beginning to step out with our head high. As follows:

"Arts"—Make your own investigation. Any observant artist will tell you that American painting, from murals to miniatures, has swept ahead faster in the last five years than in the previous hundred years.

"Science"—Read the papers.

"Technology"—Change and advance is bewildering and unprecedented.

"Literature" — Native techniques, less derivation, heightened sensitivity, more integrity and realism, deeper national introspection, and a salutary rediscovery and more penetrating understanding of Americana.

There's no stopping us if we "take the goods the gods provide us."—Copyright, 1940, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New Dealers Whoop over Big Business But Are Silent about Little Fellows

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN

Whenever the New Dealers become hard pressed by the failure of their spending and experiments to bring back economic recovery to the country, they take refuge in citing headlines of corporate earnings as reported on the financial pages of daily newspapers.

Thus the chief propagandist for the Democratic national committee in his weekly excursion into the fog goes into a state of apparent ectasy over recent financial reports that corporate earnings in the first quarter of this year exceed those in the same period last year and that net corporate profits for 1939 were greater than in 1938.

It is strange to hear New Dealers undertaking to justify themselves by pointing out what they have done for big business. Most of us had been led to believe that the Roosevelt administration was dedicated to doing something for the "little fellow" and the man who works for his living.

Strange New Deal Spectacle

But it seems we were wrong. The most recent New Deal gospel is to the effect that all is well with the country if the big corporations are making money and if the dividend checks grow fat once again. Now we have the spectacle of the chief New Deal propagandist throwing his hat into the air because New York banks are, as he puts it, making a little money.

As is usual with our New Deal friend, he is distorting the picture even in regard to big business. He bases his case on the fact that in 1939 many corporations showed an improved profit condition over 1938 and that some corporations have had a better first quarter this year than they di dlast year.

But everyone knows that 1938 was a New Deal depression year—which in many industries carried over into the first quarter of 1939. So a corporation can show increased earnings and yet operate below a really profitable basis. It is like saying that a man who had a part time job last month paying $5 a week but now has a $10 a week job has improved his earning capacity 100 per cent. Technically it is a correct statement, but only a New Dealer would cheer over such "improvement."

Still Have 10,000,000 Jobless

More important to most of us than corporate statistics and dividend checks are jobs and not even the New Dealers are so brazen that they can blink down the fact that we still have 10,000,000 unemployed men and women in this country — 10,000,000—as many as in 1933, after seven years of reckless experimentation and squandering of billions of dollars.

Most of us believe more important than the size of dividend checks is the fact that during the seven New Deal years the average annual realized national income was but $464 per capita—that is, $464 per person yearly, as compared with $570 per person yearly during the seven years before the advent of the New Deal—a decrease of $106 a year.

Most of us believe that the fact that cash income from farm marketings, including subsidy payments was on annual average basis, $1,349,000,000 less during the New Deal period than in the previous seven years is more important than dividend checks. Likewise, we are distressed by the fact that the annual average value of exports from this country during the New Deal years totaled $2,595,000,000, compared with annual average of $3,989,000,000 in the previous seven-year period.

Seven Times As Many Strikes

It also seems important to most of us who work for a living that during the seven New Deal years there were 17,536 labor strikes in the United States, or an annual average of 2,505, as compared with 5,555 strikes in the previous seven-year period, or an annual average of 794.

These statistics constitute the barometer of economic conditions and general welfare in the United States—not the size of dividend checks. These statistics demonstrate that economically our country is in a sick condition and they demonstrate, much too graphically, that the average man in the factory and on the farm has not attained a more abundant life under the New Deal—even if it has gone in some small degrees to those who cash dividend checks.

Messrs. Roosevelt, Farley and Michelson may gloat over the increased size of dividend checks if they please, but most of us would be happy if we had a job or felt really secure in the job that we hold.

From the Spirit And Not the Pocketbook

From the Industrial News Review

A short time ago Wendell L. Willkie made a talk on the much-debated subject of "Liberalism." And in that talk, Mr. Willkie made this pertinent observation: "I think the idea that is in the back of many people's heads when they use the word is a distinction between the successful and the unsuccessful. All the poor people are liberals, and all the rich are whatever dirty name you want to apply to them. It may be that the rich are deserving of their bad names, but this fact has nothing to do with liberalism. Indeed, the distinction between riches and poverty, success and non-success, as a basis for a definition of liberalism is patently absurd. If you carried it to its conclusion, the only true liberals in the country would be the unemployed."

The men who have been most influential in advancing liberal doctrines have often been men of wealth. Certainly George Washington was a liberal—and he was also the richest American of his day. Thomas Jefferson, whose name is usually affiliated with the beginning of liberalism as a political issue, was relatively rich, and the owner of a magnificent Virginia estate. Liberalism comes from the spirit—not from the pocketbook. There are poor reactionaries no less than wealthy liberals.

It is a strange thing that today those who yell liberalism most often are the advocates of more centralized governmental power. They want the government to socialize certain businesses, and they want the government to regulate all other business. Their goal is statism, absolute and complete. And the whole history of liberalism has been a fight against just this. The total government, as Mr. Willkie also said, is "the most primitive form of government." Liberal government was won only after centuries of bloody warfare against the dominance of kings and dictators and politicians lusting for more power.

So next time you hear an advocate of more government talking about "liberalism," consider whether "reaction" wouldn't be a more apt term for his doctrines.

Too Few Bricks Are Being Laid

By B. C. Forbes in Forbes Magazine

If as many new homes, per million of population, had been built in the United States as have been built in the United Kingdom in recent years, we would have witnessed a 200 percent increase in activity. The population of England and Scotland is less than one-third of ours. Yet in those two small countries—three Englands and three Scotlands would not equal the area of one American state, Texas—far more houses have been built each recent year than built in this vast continent of ours. For the year ended March 31, 1939, in England and Wales alone 322,360 new homes were put up, contrasted with approximately 263,000 new family accommodations here during the same period. Of the English total, more than two-thirds were financed without any kind of governmental or other financial aid. Local Authorities, meaning municipalities, etc., were responsible for less than one-third, while the Government helped to build the insignificant total of 4,207.

Building costs are much lower in Britain than here. One reader informs me that whereas the British bricklayer lays some 1,800 bricks a day, the average for union bricklayers here ranges from only one-third to not more than half that number. Shocking, if true, since we perennially boast about the superiority of American workers.

Home building costs in this country must come down. More regular employment at much lower daily wage rates would benefit building craftsmen, home builders, our whole national wellbeing. If the many suits now being instituted by the department of Justice against contractors and unions associated with building actually lead to lowering the cost of building, a vitally important objective will have been attained.

Alternative Is Faced by Hitler

By HUGH S. JOHNSON

Hugh Johnson

Washington, May 3.—The B[ritish] surrender of the Mediterra[nean] route under threat of Italy and news from Norway is very discouraging. Available facts are so few and forces hanging in the balance of indecision so great that I have been very chary of comment on this unknown war. This piece is no prophecy. It is just bewildered conjecture.

How can the British abandon Mediterranean? That would be abandon France whose lifeline link with her African colonies. It would be to abandon the Anglo-French Near-Eastern [position] which is rapidly being asse[mbled] as a threat to the totalitarian flank. That army couldn't be mi[ni]tioned and supplied by the route around Africa. It might possibly be fed by supplies co[me] through the Red Sea but not ported by munitions and e[qui]ment.

In Hitler's Hands

To abandon the Mediterranean Italy would also be to aba[ndon] Turkey and leave the mes[s] Southeastern Europe in Hi[tler's] hands, to the extent that he c[an] divide up the spoils by some [sort] of trade between the supposed [al]mies, Mussolini and Stalin. S[uch] pairing of strange bedfellows w[ould] be stronger than the coupli[ng] supposed enemies, Hitler and S[talin] to ravage and divide Poland.

Such results are impossible England and certainly for Fr[ance] to contemplate. Therefore it [is] pretty clear that England is leaving the Mediterranean [to] anything except her ordinary m[er]cial traffic usually ro[ute] through the Suez Canal. She is getting her rich argosies pro[tected] out of an area of danger fr[om] sudden possible clash of aerial maritime navies in those wa[ters].

Has Two Choices

If that warfare opens up, the fair in Norway will just be a show and that raises my prim[ary] conjecture. Hitler has two ch[oices] in grand strategy. He can co[n]trate on the British Empire striking at its heart in We[st] Europe or, if he has the a[id] assistance of Italy, he can [also] to cut it in pieces in detail strengthen his own economic military, position by operati[ons] Southeastern Europe and the M[id]terranean. He can do either he can't do both at the same [time].

Appraisals Reviewed

Conquest of England, or [the] impairment of British sea[power] even if he holds Scandanavia, [is] most unlikely. It is true that [Hit]ler is rapidly revising all appra[isals] of him by so-called military ex[perts] by the astonishing speed, accu[racy] and efficiency of his operations [on] land and in the air. Such th[ings] simply were not in the books. T[hey] reveal also an unsuspected am[ount] of unreadiness, poor staff work, [poor] leadership and lack of imagina[tion] on the other side.

Nevertheless, giving these new [de]velopments full weight, the N[orth] are still very far from East str[ait] distance of England.

Critical Factor Elsewhere

It seems to me that the cri[tical] element in this war just now is so much what has disastrously h[ap]pened in Norway, as what may happen in the Mediterranean. I doubt if even Hitler knows which course he will take. He [has] jockeyed himself into an excel[lent] position to take either. Which it will be depends just now more Benito than on Adolf.

A second conjecture grows out the first. If the European [axis] points west, it points toward [Af]rica. This is a principal point in su[pp]interventionist reasoning. But if [he] shoots off toward the southwest new map of Roumania and the B[al]kans, a partial dismemberment the British and French Em[pire] coupled with possible Allied air naval disaster—will those who th[ink] we can best protect our home mixing in abroad, still say the lies are fighting our war?—[Dis]tributed by United Feature Sy[n]cate, Inc.

Economic Aspect of the War Still an Important Factor

RECENT MILITARY REVERSES for the Allies in Norway have served to obscure the economic aspect of the big war. This, however, is not by any means an inconsequential factor, which may have telling effect at no distant time.

While losses in sea engagements have apparently been considerable, the Allies insist, with a tone of confidence, that control of the seas remains with them, that the Nazi navy has been diminished to impotent strength and that they are thus allowed to divert warships to other areas.

The Nazis undoubtedly have suffered heavy losses of their war reserves in the prosecution of their Norwegian blitzkrieg. They have been obliged to expend great quantities of oils, gasolines, explosives and other supplies, while the much-needed ore supplies of the north are still cut off. Thus, if the Allied blockade has had any appreciable effect, and the indications are that it has had, the Nazis will likely be forced to new quick and desperate efforts to make the most of their war machine. It is doubtless for this reason that the expectation obtains of a new thrust by the Nazis either through the Netherlands or Belgium, or, what late moves seem more to indicate, somewhere in southeastern Europe, to cope with which the Allies have amassed huge fleets and large armies nearby.

We are reminded that trying moments are not unfamiliar to the British and that they have before experienced cabinet shake-ups in the midst of war. But such things would seem to emphasize more than anything else a unity of the British people rather than disunity or demoralization, as they reflect a demand for more vigorous prosecution of the war effort.

In view of these factors, discussion of plans by boasting Nazi leaders of what Germany is to do after the war seems a little premature.

War Picture Changes May Affect Trade

Decision of the British government to divert its shipping from the Mediterranean is one of them and it will naturally affect the trade of the United States. Should Italy go into the war beside Germany, the whole Mediterranean would have to be proclaimed a combat area, forbidden to American shipping. In that event practically all of the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa would become involved. This would leave, of all the great nations, only the ports of Japan open to American shipping.

Such a prospect, however, is not as alarming as some war jingoists might estimate. This country is pretty well self-contained and could get along fairly well, not only by reliance upon its own resources but those also of other countries of the western hemisphere. Also considerable foreign shipping could be retained although rerouted longer distances.

There is little use of crossing bridges before they are reached, of course, but sometimes they can be sighted ahead and due preparations made. But the war situation is in such a flux and the scenes are changing so rapidly that what seems to be one certain bridge to cross may turn out to be not the one at all.

Some Statistics on Steel Hit Frontier Argument

HOUSEWIVES of the nation bought more than 400,000 net tons of steel last year through their purchases of kitchen ranges, refrigerators and washing machines, thereby creating the equivalent of full-time employment for nearly 10,000 men in the plants of the steel industry, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute.

In addition, their purchases provided still more jobs in the manufacture of the refrigerators, ranges and washing machines themselves.

During 1939 more than 5,217,000 refrigerators, ranges and washing machines were produced, a total of thirty-five per cent above the 1938 production of 3,863,000 units but about twenty-two per cent below the 1937 peak of 3,691,000.

About 201,000 tons of steel were consumed in the gas and electric refrigerators produced last year, while an additional 159,000 tons of steel went into the kitchen ranges produced last year.

Approximately 41,000 tons of steel were used last year in the production of washing machines.

This cannot be taken as indicating that our frontiers have vanished and that industrial America has no place to go.

Where a Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing

FOR MANY DECADES, literacy has been one of the criteria by which nations have been judged. To have a high literacy percentage was a badge of merit, proof of being civilized; a low mark meant something close to barbarism. During the last quarter of a century, however, confidence in this yardstick has been somewhat undermined. There is now a suspicion that the important thing is how that superior literacy is used.

Germany is a highly literate nation, but it has been responsible for two great wars which have thrust real civilization back to the dark ages. Consequently, one will be pardoned for apprehension upon reading that the percentage of literacy for the Soviet population above nine years of age has risen from fifty-one per cent in 1926 to eighty-one per cent in 1940. These figures are, of course, Moscow's.

It is obvious that the main purpose of improving the minds of the Russian peasants is to help them read and understand Soviet propaganda. If intellectual advancement goes no further than that, the next generation will be primed with Bolshevik doctrines and insulated from any idea which might disturb complacent belief in what is handed out from Moscow.

It comes down to Pope's old adage that a little learning is a dangerous thing. When there are 170,000,000 people of whom more than four-fifths can read that Stalin is omniscient, Russia all-powerful, and democratic countries all foul, without having either the capacity or the opportunity to check such statements with the truth, there exists a tremendous power for evil.

War Opposition Sentiment Big But Might Quickly Change

GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON has commented upon the general prevalence of sentiment in the nation against its participation in the European war. There is no doubt about it. Conventions everywhere are continuing to pass resolutions against it. So strong is the feeling that renewed effort is being made by the mothers of the country in a move to put through the Hamilton Fish resolution, which provides for a national referendum before there can be conscription for foreign wars. There would, perhaps, be less pressure of this kind were there not so much uncertainty about the impulsiveness of the present executive.

But Johnson sounds a warning that sentiment of this kind, however widespread and solid, can likely be changed over night in the face of eloquence and hokum and high-pressure selling, which, in the days of the World war, brought about a war psychosis bordering on hysteria.

Johnson notes that such a thing is again possible, as it doubtless is should those in charge of affairs utilize all the available agencies and sources of power to that end. There are handicaps, however, that did not obtain in the World war period, the chief being the realization of the hooking we got, along with a frustration of our high idealism. But the danger remains, nevertheless, and it is something to which the people must be alert and guard against, especially when it comes to false or misleading propaganda.

While an Italian makes a cloth of milk, an American chemist is producing ice cream from cotton. Plainly, science is on its way, and it will be interesting to see where.

German parachute troops are equipped with collapsible bicycles. The bike tires, no doubt, can be quickly converted into waterwings on the way down—if necessary.

The Browser Gets a Letter

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Of all things! The Browser has received a flattering letter from a lady who praises him for saying that he did NOT like a book. The book was "Chad Hanna", Walter Edmonds' novel about circus days in America a century ago. The Browser thought it dull and unworthy of Mr. Edmonds and said so. So up comes a Miss Helen Thomas of Mill Valley, California who seems to read all the book review magazines—and says that "yours was the only review which dealt rightly with an inferior piece of work by a good man". (She means that she and the Browser agree).

Marshall Maslin

And she asks: "How under the sun could some of those reviewers have said what they said about 'Chad Hanna' if they had read the book? Mr. Edmonds certainly didn't do for his characters in that book what he has always done before. And yet this book has received louder puffs at the start than his other, better books."

The answer is simply that the other reviewers liked "Chad Hanna" and the Browser didn't. And sometimes a second-rate book does arouse greater enthusiasm on first reading than a masterpiece. But (1) book reviewers do read the books they review. (2) Sometimes they like books because they like their authors (and vice versa). (3) Sometimes it is difficult to review a book fairly when you do know the author personally. The personal acquaintanceship gets in the way and no reviewer likes to break up a friendship merely because of a book—because the author is so precious to the reviewer as a friend. So he praises a book he doesn't admire and betrays the readers who have faith in his judgment.

Once upon a time the Browser was invited to a cocktail party to meet Irving Stone, author of "Lust for Life" and "Sailor on Horseback", two good books. He couldn't attend and did not become acquainted with Mr. Stone. So you see his hands are clean and he can review Mr. Stone's novel "False Witness" (Doubleday Doran) without prejudice.

It is a simple story with a grand theme—the victory of decency over evil. The events occurred in the little Mission Valley in Southern California at the turn of this century. John Annister, a lean and kindly New Englander had made that valley beautiful. He ruled it with gentle integrity. Suddenly one day a poor woman named Widow Smithers announced that someone had stolen $50 from the bottom of her flour barrel. She accused Mary Shoe, the valley's work-by-the-day woman. But Hilda Hauser, daughter of the town miser August Hauser, had been seen coming out of the widow's cottage that day—and Hilda went to a nearby town the next day and bought a new dress to catch the eye of the young minister.

Annister fights to save the reputation of simple old Mary Shoe. Annister fights with every mean device to convict Mary and clear his daughter. Finally he takes John's farm from him and John dies. But John's brave young granddaughter fights on, establishes Mary Shoe's innocence, and preserves the decency of Mission Valley. (Comment: The theme is sound but I wouldn't recognize one of Author Stone's characters if I met him or her on the street. They are all stock fictional characters and Mr. Stone was unable to breathe life into them).

Neither does the Browser know Salvador de Madariaga, author of "Christopher Columbus" (Macmillan)—but here's a rich and fascinating life of one of the most subtle great men who ever strode across the stage of history. Incidentally de Madariaga argues that the man who discovered America was of Jewish blood. He argues precisely and persuasively and his book should become a classic among the lives of the Great Discover. Anyway, it delighted Marsh Maslin.

Golden Age Is Seen by Teacher

BY EDWIN C. HILL

We rush into print with the story of a thoroughly informed man who knows all the bad news and who is an optimist. He has no formulas, no conjure words, no self-hypnotizing phrases and he doesn't feed on any books which chart a short-cut to the millentum. He is an historian and a teacher of history, a friend of this writer for many years. He offers you nothing out of Pittsburgh Phil's feed box, or Sibyl's cave of the winds. He says the shrewdest speculators rarely bet on inside information, but rather on what most sensible people know. He reads the signs of the time as follows:

Edwin C. Hill

America is now just about ready to shove into a golden age which will far surpass Italy's grand march of the fifteenth century. There will be a flowering of the arts, of science and the humanities such as man has never known before. This will come not by political devices, not by any conscious grooving or channelling of the social order, but by the fruition of creative forces, long latent in our national genius. It will be made possible not only by these innate capacities but by our isolation and our lavish abundance of national resources.

To Young People

"If you write anything about this," said my friend, "I wish you would address it particularly to young people. I am fifty years old. I served in the World War. I think I give full weight to all the doom and misery in the world today. And with all this, I can tell you from my heart that I wish I were twenty years old, to live through what I believe will surely be the world's greatest ascendancy of the human spirit, here in America.

"I believe the elders of our country should, with evangelical fervor, impress on youth the following: In all the history of the planet, the American nation—the system of government, its geography, its resources, its culture, its Bill of Rights, its creative genius—is absolutely and utterly unique. It's foundation marked a break-away from dynastic, feudal, mediaeval and pre-mediaeval darkness of more than 5,000 years duration. Every time I see a youngster I want to take him by the scruff of the neck and hammer into him a realization that this country is something different. It's news, I tell you—something new, strange and unexpected, as the dictionary defines news. If we get that into our heads, we will be less apt to turn back for one more round of the devil's broth of war and foreign imperialism."

Mistake Is Noted

In pre-Elizabethan England, there were stupid rulers and there were noisy, ignorant and rapacious pressure groups. It looked hopeless. But there was a stirring and outreach of the human spirit which blazed out in the splendors of the Elizabethan age. After the Spanish Inquisition, there was good government, for that age, in Spain, but no vitality of the mind or spirit, and the country sank back into ignorance and decay.

The point I make is that it is a mistake to diagnose a nation by its immediate political or institutional or even economic status. Its hope, and despair is the measure of its vitality, its creativeness, its diffusion of adventurous intelligence, its surge into the future. Testing America's reflexes and applying the stethoscope, any qualified social historian of today will tell you that this country is no hospital case. That's understatement, of course. We are boiling with vitality.

In Support

Specific observations support my belief that we are beginning to step out with our head high. As follows:

"Arts"—Make your own investigation. Any observant artist will tell you that American painting, from murals to miniatures, has swept ahead faster in the last five years than in the previous hundred years.

"Science"—Read the papers.

"Technology"—Change and advance is bewildering and unprecedented.

"Literature" — Native techniques, less derivation, heightened sensitivity, more integrity and realism, deeper national introspection, and a salutary rediscovery and more penetrating understanding of Americana.

There's no stopping us if we "take the goods the gods provide us."—Copyright, 1940, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New Dealers Whoop over Big Business But Are Silent about Little Fellows

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN

Whenever the New Dealers become hard pressed by the failure of their spending and experiments to bring back economic recovery to the country, they take refuge in citing headlines of corporate earnings as reported on the financial pages of daily newspapers.

Thus the chief propagandist for the Democratic national committee in his weekly excursion into the fog goes into a state of apparent ectasy over recent financial reports that corporate earnings in the first quarter of this year exceed those in the same period last year and that net corporate profits for 1939 were greater than in 1938.

It is strange to hear New Dealers undertaking to justify themselves by pointing out what they have done for big business. Most of us had been led to believe that the Roosevelt administration was dedicated to doing something for the "little fellow" and the man who works for his living.

Strange New Deal Spectacle

But it seems we were wrong. The most recent New Deal gospel is to the effect that all is well with the country if the big corporations are making money and if the dividend checks grow fat once again. Now we have the spectacle of the chief New Deal propagandist throwing his hat into the air because New York banks are, as he puts it, making a little money.

As is usual with our New Deal friend, he is distorting the picture even in regard to big business. He bases his case on the fact that in 1939 many corporations showed an improved profit condition over 1938 and that some corporations have had a better first quarter this year than they di dlast year.

But everyone knows that 1938 was a New Deal depression year—which in many industries carried over into the first quarter of 1939. So a corporation can show increased earnings and yet operate below a really profitable basis. It is like saying that a man who had a part time job last month paying $5 a week but now has a $10 a week job has improved his earning capacity 100 per cent. Technically it is a correct statement, but only a New Dealer would cheer over such "improvement."

Still Have 10,000,000 Jobless

More important to most of us than corporate statistics and dividend checks are jobs and not even the New Dealers are so brazen that they can blink down the fact that we still have 10,000,000 unemployed men and women in this country — 10,000,000—as many as in 1933, after seven years of reckless experimentation and squandering of billions of dollars.

Most of us believe more important than the size of dividend checks is the fact that during the seven New Deal years the average annual realized national income was but $464 per capita—that is, $464 per person yearly, as compared with $570 per person yearly during the seven years before the advent of the New Deal—a decrease of $106 a year.

Most of us believe that the fact that cash income from farm marketings, including subsidy payments was on annual average basis, $1,349,000,000 less during the New Deal period than in the previous seven years is more important than dividend checks. Likewise, we are distressed by the fact that the annual average value of exports from this country during the New Deal years totaled $2,595,000,000, compared with annual average of $3,989,000,000 in the previous seven-year period.

Seven Times As Many Strikes

It also seems important to most of us who work for a living that during the seven New Deal years there were 17,536 labor strikes in the United States, or an annual average of 2,505, as compared with 5,555 strikes in the previous seven-year period, or an annual average of 794.

These statistics constitute the barometer of economic conditions and general welfare in the United States—not the size of dividend checks. These statistics demonstrate that economically our country is in a sick condition and they demonstrate, much too graphically, that the average man in the factory and on the farm has not attained a more abundant life under the New Deal—even if it has gone in some small degrees to those who cash dividend checks.

Messrs. Roosevelt, Farley and Michelson may gloat over the increased size of dividend checks if they please, but most of us would be happy if we had a job or felt really secure in the job that we hold.

From the Spirit And Not the Pocketbook

From the Industrial News Review

A short time ago Wendell L. Willkie made a talk on the much-debated subject of "Liberalism." And in that talk, Mr. Willkie made this pertinent observation: "I think the idea that is in the back of many people's heads when they use the word is a distinction between the successful and the unsuccessful. All the poor people are liberals, and all the rich are whatever dirty name you want to apply to them. It may be that the rich are deserving of their bad names, but this fact has nothing to do with liberalism. Indeed, the distinction between riches and poverty, success and non-success, as a basis for a definition of liberalism is patently absurd. If you carried it to its conclusion, the only true liberals in the country would be the unemployed."

The men who have been most influential in advancing liberal doctrines have often been men of wealth. Certainly George Washington was a liberal—and he was also the richest American of his day. Thomas Jefferson, whose name is usually affiliated with the beginning of liberalism as a political issue, was relatively rich, and the owner of a magnificent Virginia estate. Liberalism comes from the spirit—not from the pocketbook. There are poor reactionaries no less than wealthy liberals.

It is a strange thing that today those who yell liberalism most often are the advocates of more centralized governmental power. They want the government to socialize certain businesses, and they want the government to regulate all other business. Their goal is statism, absolute and complete. And the whole history of liberalism has been a fight against just this. The total government, as Mr. Willkie also said is "the most primitive form of government." Liberal government was won only after centuries of bloody warfare against the dominance of kings and dictators and politicians lusting for more power.

So next time you hear an advocate of more government talking about "liberalism," consider whether "reaction" wouldn't be a more apt term for his doctrines.

Quotable Quotes

By Representative Andrew J. May, Democrat, of Kentucky

The government's own utility, known as the TVA, has been exempted by both the states in which it operates from regulation by the state institutions and therefore it is not subject to state or federal regulation.—Rep. Andrew J. May (D., Ky., Cong. Record, April 17, 1940.

Too Few Bricks Are Being Laid

By B. C. Forbes in Forbes Magazine

If as many new homes, per million of population, had been built in the United States as have been built in the United Kingdom in recent years, we would have witnessed a 200 percent increase in activity. The population of England and Scotland is less than one-third of ours. Yet in those two small countries—three Englands and three Scotlands would not equal the area of one American state, Texas—far more houses have been built each recent year than built in this vast continent of ours. For the year ended March 31, 1939, in England and Wales alone 322,360 new homes were put up, contrasted with approximately 263,000 new family accommodations here during the same period. Of the English total, more than two-thirds were financed without any kind of governmental or other financial aid. Local Authorities, meaning municipalities, etc., were responsible for less than one-third, while the Government helped to build the insignificant total of 4,207.

Building costs are much lower in Britain than here. One reader informs me that whereas the British bricklayer lays some 1,800 bricks a day, the average for union bricklayers here ranges from only one-third to not more than half that number. Shocking, if true, since we perennially boast about the superiority of American workers.

Home building costs in this country must come down. More regular employment at much lower daily wage rates would benefit building craftsmen, home builders, our whole national wellbeing. If the many suits now being instituted by the department of Justice against contractors and unions associated with building actually lead to lowering the cost of building, a vitally important objective will have been attained.

Alternative Is Faced by Hitler

By HUGH S. JOHNSON

Washington, May 3.—The B[ritish] surrender of the Mediterra[nean] route under threat of Italy and news from Norway is very discouraging. Available facts are so few and forces hanging in the balance of indecision so great that I have been very chary of comment on this unknown war. This piece is no prophecy. It is just bewildered conjecture.

Hugh Johnson

How can the British abandon Mediterranean? That would abandon France whose lifeline link with her African colonies. It would be to abandon the Anglo-French Near-Eastern which is rapidly being asse[rted] as a threat to the totalitarian flank. That army couldn't be [sus]tioned and supplied by the route around Africa. It might sibly be fed by supplies through the Red Sea but not ported by munitions and ment.

In Hitler's Hands

To abandon the Mediterran[ean] Italy would also be to ab[andon] Turkey and leave the mes[s] Southeastern Europe in H[itler's] hands, to the extent that he divide up the spoils by some of trade between the supposed mies, Mussolini and Stalin. S[uch a] pairing of strange bedfellows be stronger than the coupli[ng] supposed enemies, Hitler and S[talin] to ravage and divide Poland.

Such results are impossible England and certainly for F[rance] to contemplate. Therefore it pretty clear that England leaving the Mediterranean anything except her ordinary mercial traffic usually r[ounds] through the Suez Canal. She getting her rich argosies pro[tected] out of an area of danger f[rom] sudden possible clash of aeria[l] maritime navies in those wa[ters].

Has Two Choices

If that warfare opens up, th[ere's] fair in Norway will just be a show and that raises my pri[mary] conjecture. Hitler has two c[hoices] in grand strategy. He can co[n]trate on the British Empire striking at its heart in We[st] Europe or, if he has the a[id] assistance of Italy, he can a[lso] to cut it in pieces in detail strengthen his own economic military, position by operati[ons] Southeastern Europe and the M[ed]terranean. He can do either he can't do both at the same t[ime].

Appraisals Reviewed

Conquest of England, or impairment of British sea[power] even if he holds Scandanavia, most unlikely. It is true that [Hit]ler is rapidly revising all appra[isals] of him by so-called military ex[perts] by the astonishing speed, accu[racy] and efficiency of his operations land and in the air. Such t[hings] simply were not in the books. T[hey] reveal also an unsuspected am[ount] of unreadiness, poor staff work, leadership and lack of imagina[tion] on the other side.

Nevertheless, giving these new velopments full weight, the N[azis] are still very far from East Str[ait] distance of England.

Critical Factor Elsewhere

It seems to me that the cr[itical] element in this war just now is so much what has disastrously p[ro]pened in Norway, as what may happen in the Mediterranean. doubt if even Hitler knows which course he will take. He jockeyed himself into an exce[llent] position to take either. Which it will be depends just now mo[re] Benito than on Adolf.

Watch This Primary

AP Feature Service

Birmingham, Ala. — A gauge of anti-third term sentiment in the Deep South will be supplied by the party primary in this traditionally Democratic state May 7.

David S. Anderson, Liberty Leaguer and long-time New Deal foe, is one of six candidates for four places as delegates-at-large to the Democratic convention. All are pledged to Speaker William B. Bankhead, but Anderson has devoted major attention to his anti-third term stand.

Other candidates are Senators John H. Bankhead and Lister Hill; Col. Harry M. Ayers, Anniston newspaper publisher; Lieut. Gov. Albert A. Carmichael and Rep. Henry B. Steagall, chairman of the house committee on banking and currency. They are not committed on the third term issue, but are regarded as pro-administration.

Anderson's race has aroused New Deal opposition and the issue is clear cut.

Speaker Bankhead is assured of Alabama's 22 votes, although his name does not appear on the primary ballot, but interest has centered on what will happen if his name should be withdrawn at the convention.

Postmaster General Farley has made two trips into the state since Jan. 1, and Paul V. McNutt plans to come here this month. Vice President Garner's supporters have been bombarding political leaders with campaign literature.

W. B. Bankhead

On the Republican side, an uninstructed delegation of 13 is virtually a certainty. GOP delegates will be chosen at district conventions and at the state convention in Birmingham May 17.

Supporter of Senator Robert Taft claim the 13 votes for him, at least on the opening ballots. Dewey and Vandenberg also have their backers, and Published Frank Gannett has addressed state Republicans.

The New Deal is not an issue in state races and is only incidental in the congressional contests. Speaker Bankhead is unopposed for another term.

Toledo, Ore. (AP) — Editor M. I. Brown of the weekly Waldport Tribune joined the ranks of candid journalists with this one.

Believe Italy Will Stay Out of War

Washington, May 3 (AP)—A strong impression appeared to prevail in government circles tonight that Italy will refrain from taking any immediate plunge into the European war.

Sumner Welles, undersecretary of state, gave some indications to that effect after a conference at the White House attended by President Roosevelt, Prince Ascanio Colonna, the Italian Ambassador, and Welles. Yesterday the United States ambassador to Rome, William Phillips, conferred with Mussolini, and the later was reported to have given assurance that Italy was not about to go to war.

Although Welles refused to say anything definite about today's conference, he did state in response to questions that the state department was not considering warning Americans to leave Italy. There are some 19,000 Americans in that country—more than there are in Great Britain, Germany and France combined—and it is believed that if the state department thought war was imminent they would be warned to leave.

Col. Johnson Named Member of I.C.C.

Washington, May 3 (AP)—President Roosevelt has nominated a southerner — described by the White House as "a man familiar with the problems of the south"—to membership on the Interstate Commerce Commission, thus leaving unchanged the commission's geographical complexion.

To succeed Marion M. Caskie of Alabama, who resigned, Mr. Roosevelt selected Col. J. Monroe Johnson of South Carolina, now assistant secretary of commerce.

Pennsylvania C.I.O. Praises New Deal

Reading, Pa., May 3 (AP)—Pennsylvania's unions of the CIO approved solidly a resolution which left the question of endorsement of President Roosevelt for a third term to the incoming state Industrial Union Council executive board.

The resolution, passed unanimously, lauded the New Deal program, however. Previously, the third term issue had been referred to the convention committee on political action.

Thomas Kennedy, former lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania and secretary-treasury of the United Mine Workers of America told the delegates that to adopt a resolution which might be contrary to the CIO's national program would be "suicide."

He disclosed the committe had rejected proposals asking formation of a third political party, opposition to a third term, and endorsement of a third term.

The committee, Kennedy said, agreed that the presidential election created for the state council "something that is more of a national problem than a state problem; therefore, the delegates should give some leverage to the national CIO officersx x x."

John L. Lewis, national CIO chieftain, has expressed opposition to another term for the president.

Birmingham, Ala. — A gauge of anti-third term sentiment in the Deep South will be supplied by the party primary in this traditionally Democratic state May 7.

David S. Anderson, Liberty Leaguer and long-time New Deal foe, is one of six candidates for four places as delegates-at-large to the Democratic convention. All are pledged to Speaker William B. Bankhead, but Anderson has devoted major attention to his anti-third term stand.

Other candidates are Senators John H. Bankhead and Lister Hill; Col. Harry M. Ayers, Anniston newspaper publisher; Lieut. Gov. Albert A. Carmichael and Rep. Henry B. Steagall, chairman of the house committee on banking and currency. They are not committed on the third term issue, but are regarded as pro-administration.

Anderson's race has aroused New Deal opposition and the issue is clear cut.

Speaker Bankhead is assured of Alabama's 22 votes, although his name does not appear on the primary ballot, but interest has centered on what will happen if his name should be withdrawn at the convention.

Postmaster General Farley has made two trips into the state since Jan. 1, and Paul V. McNutt plans to come here this month. Vice President Garner's supporters have been bombarding political leaders with campaign literature.

W. B. Bankhead

On the Republican side, an uninstructed delegation of 13 is virtually a certainty. GOP delegates will be chosen at district conventions and at the state convention in Birmingham May 17.

Supporter of Senator Robert Taft claim the 13 votes for him, at least on the opening ballots. Dewey and Vandenberg also have their backers, and Published Frank Gannett has addressed state Republicans.

The New Deal is not an issue in state races and is only incidental in the congressional contests. Speaker Bankhead is unopposed for another term.

Honest Editor

Toledo, Ore. (AP) — Editor M. I. Brown of the weekly Waldport Tribune joined the ranks of candid journalists with this one.

Increasing his paper from four to six pages to handle extra advertising, Brown left Page Five blank except for this explanation: "Don't laugh! We had a h--- of a time printing the other five pages."

Believe Italy Will Stay Out of War

Washington, May 3 (AP)—A strong impression appeared to prevail in government circles tonight that Italy will refrain from taking any immediate plunge into the European war.

Sumner Welles, undersecretary of state, gave some indications to that effect after a conference at the White House attended by President Roosevelt, Prince Ascanio Colonna, the Italian Ambassador, and Welles. Yesterday the United States ambassador to Rome, William Phillips, conferred with Mussolini, and the later was reported to have given assurance that Italy was not about to go to war.

Although Welles refused to say anything definite about today's conference, he did state in response to questions that the state department was not considering warning Americans to leave Italy. There are some 19,000 Americans in that country—more than there are in Great Britain, Germany and France combined—and it is believed that if the state department thought war was imminent they would be warned to leave.

Col. Johnson Named Member of I.C.C.

Washington, May 3 (AP)—President Roosevelt has nominated a southerner — described by the White House as "a man familiar with the problems of the south"—to membership on the Interstate Commerce Commission, thus leaving unchanged the commission's geographical complexion.

To succeed Marion M. Caskie of Alabama, who resigned, Mr. Roosevelt selected Col. J. Monroe Johnson of South Carolina, now assistant secretary of commerce.

Pennsylvania C.I.O. Praises New Deal

Reading, Pa., May 3 (AP)—Pennsylvania's unions of the CIO approved solidly a resolution which left the question of endorsement of President Roosevelt for a third term to the incoming state Industrial Union Council executive board.

The resolution, passed unanimously, lauded the New Deal program, however. Previously, the third term issue had been referred to the convention committee on political action.

Thomas, Kennedy, former lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania and secretary-treasury of the United Mine Workers of America told the delegates that to adopt a resolution which might be contrary to the CIO's national program would be "suicide."

He disclosed the committe had rejected proposals asking formation of a third political party, opposition to a third term, and endorsement of a third term.

The committee, Kennedy said, agreed that the presidential election created for the state council "something that is more of a national problem than a state problem; therefore, the delegates should give some leverage to the national CIO officersx x x."

John L. Lewis, national CIO chieftain, has expressed opposition to another term for the president.

SYNOPSIS

THE CHARACTERS:

BENJAMIN MERRIFIELD, aged capitalist, hires

GAYLE DIXON to make love to his grandson.

JEREMY TUCKER, a shy student of archeology.

YESTERDAY: Gayle is made a member of the Merrifield household when she is the first to answer the unusual advertisement that is answered by several hundred young women.

CHAPTER TWO

"IT'S ALL right, butler. I'm not the least bit afraid of him. I'm not afraid of anybody, see? I can't afford to be. But I've got to see him now! If that herd of females gets at him he'll be—"

Graham, the Merrifield butler who was already distressed at this day's unseemly routine, had come again into the master's study. At his heels this time was a strange young man. Of one accord Mr. Merrifield, Mr. Weems and Gayle Dixon turned to look.

The young man was decidedly in earnest—obviously he had forced himself right over poor Graham's authority—and yet he wore a happy smile, too. His hair was curly, and black. He was well dressed, and built like an athlete. He carried a hat with snapped-down brim.

"This gentleman has forced—" Graham began, but the young man grabbed the conversational reins.

"How do you do, everybody!" He turned to the three who sat before Mr. Merrifield's fireplace. "Thanks, butler; goodby. How do you do, everybody!" His repeating himself, while he quickly appraised the people and setting before him, caused Gayle Dixon to smile in amusement. Mr. Weems' mouth had dropped open, and Mr. Merrifield himself stared, incredulous.

"You are Mr. Merrifield, sir," the intruder resumed, addressing that gentleman unerringly, "I apologize for forcing my way in, but the truth is I've got to have work! Look, Mr. Merrifield, there are 500 girls down there now, and by the time you start seeing them at eight there'll be a thousand! Now, you can't handle that many in a month. I'm used to crowds and shoving and all that. I played football for four years—I'm just out of college—I can handle any kind of rush, and I can interview them for you. Now look, you give me some idea of what you want and I'll begin weeding them out so that you—"

"I—you—who— Mr. Weems stammered that.

"My name's Bill Bailey, and if you'll excuse me, sir, we haven't much time to wait. I don't care what you pay me. I've been trying to get a job since January and I'll take anything. I'll prove I can deliver the goods first. Okay, hunh?"

Mr. Merrifield was staring at him and working his old jaws, but no sound came. Poor Mr. Weems was indignant, haughty; Gayle highly amused. Most likely Mr. Merrifield—who had been a well-disciplined executive for half a century and more—would have said a great deal in another moment or two, but at the instant the flood began.

Some of the 500-odd girls evidently sensed that Bill Bailey and the butler would lead the way to the Merrifield sanctum, so the more daring ones had started their own trip upstairs. Others had followed instantly. Now the feminine mob was about to engulf the Merrifield study!

Bill Bailey was first to act. He jumped to a chair.

"Quiet! Quiet, everybody!" he shouted, commandingly. "Stand where you are! . . . Now listen, girls! Anybody who forces her way in will not be given a chance. Understand? All of you back out like ladies, doggone it, and start filing through that door one at a time! Mr. Merrifield—uh, he wants me to say that he thanks all of you very kindly and regrets that he can hire only one. I'll pick out six or eight for him to choose from, while he and his brother and granddaughter, or somebody, look on. Understand?"

He gave one hurried glance at the trio by the fireplace, then turned back to the mob. Girls had completely filled the great hallway outside the study and Bill talked loudly so that all those and even the others still on the stairway could hear. Mr. Merrifield and Mr. Weems looked helplessly at each other. Gayle Dixon was wide-eyed.

"Start walking by, slowly," Bill hurried on, with a positive air of authority. "Head out that other door yonder unless I take you out of the line. Miss—uh, you are Miss Merrifield or somebody, aren't you?"

He addressed Gayle for the first time.

"Yes, I—I really am somebody, but—" Gayle was quick-witted, too. She moved forward, ready to help.

"Okay. Now look—you lead the procession back outside again, eh? You know your way around this palace. Ought to be another way out somewhere. Your grandfather will be smothered in face powder if we don't act fast. Get me?"

"I get you!" Gayle stepped out, motioning to the girls to follow. She hoped—blindly hoped!—that a door across the room would lead somehow to an avenue of escape again, and fortunately it did.

The two old men said not a word for almost an hour.

They just stood by the fireplace and stared. Girls of every possible classification—there were even a few Chinese and one hopeful colored lass with very definite qualifications—passed in review before the astonishing Bill Bailey. Bill greeted each one cordially, spoke a kindly word or two, but hurried them all past.

Every few minutes he asked a girl to step out of the line and wait. When Gayle had the line strung out to the lawn again, and had worked herself back up stairs with her air of authority, she found nine beautiful girls waiting in some confusion.

Standing there by the door, she was conscious all at once of Jeremy Tucker at her elbow. Jeremy, the young grandson of Mr. Merrifield, who had appeared earlier in dressing robe and had been sent away, like a little boy, to make himself presentable.

"Oh, I say!" Jeremy stared in astonishment at the moving line of girls. "Whatever is—" He couldn't finish.

"These are girls who came in response to Mr. Merrifield's advertisement," Gayle explained. "They want to work for him. Poor dears!"

"Oh, for goodness sake!" Jeremy fled.

Gayle wished he had stayed. She wanted to study him. He was the man she was hired to woo! That is, Mr. Merrifield had said he wanted her to make love to young Jeremy. Did Jeremy understand that arrangement?

Whew! All at once the possibility of that assailed Gayle. Her face showed deep concern and she wished she could ask Mr. Merrifield about it at once, but he was obviously too distracted now. Anyway, Gayle wasn't sure she wanted to woo a man for pay. Jeremy Tucker appeared decent enough, refined, really, but colorless.

In the end Bill had selected 12 possible candidates. Then he pitched in with gentleness but firmness, displaying a rare charm, to cut that 12 down to six. When only the six remained, he turned to Mr. Merrifield again.

"I think, sir, that you yourself will want to choose the final candidate. These I assure you are the six best looking, and I'll bet a red hat they're the smartest ones, too. Do you want the rest of us to get out so you can go into a private huddle with these girls?"

"Why—why, yes. No! No, I—yes!" Poor Mr. Merrifield. He was a brusque, direct man himself, but after all he was approaching 80 years of age.

A moment later, though, he found himself alone with the six maidens and he had regained his poise. He swelled a little, looked almost fierce.

There before him stood youth! Beautiful, hopeful youth. Confident youth. Old Mr. Merrifield just stared at them for a minute or so, then smiled benignly from where he sat in the swivel chair of his great desk.

But he never did address them there. Instead, he suddenly turned and banged a large hand down on a signal bell, then bellowed loudly.

"Mr. Weems, where are you?"

The secretary hurried back in. Gayle and Bill Bailey peered intently through the door he left open.

"Mr. Weems, confound it, put all six of these young ladies on the payroll at once! You hear me?"

"Oh, of course, sir! But what are they to do?"

"How in the devil do I know! And Mr. Weems—send that astonishing young Bailey back in here!

"This gentleman has forced . . ." Graham began.

ALONG IN the play of the hand, suppose one defender has already shown a good deal of high card strength, such as, perhaps, an ace-king. If he made no bid of any kind during the auction, it is quite likely that he has no more high-card strength. Whatever other important honors are out of sight are probably in his partner's hand. If you figure it out that way, you will do well to plan the remainder of the play on that presumption.

Here again we had fine players of the cards fusing odd conventions, including a short suit club opening to which the partner must respond with a four-card major if holding one. West knew their bidding habits as well as they themselves, and realized North might even have two four-card majors which he wouldn't show if South's response denied having one. West therefore led his diamond 3, and four tricks were rattled off pronto.

When West then shifted to his heart 3, South did some thinking. Feeling that East, with an ace-king, would probably have overcalled the original 1-Club if he also had a king or queen, but that he might have a jack, South took only the single finesse, playing the heart Q, and then set about to squeeze West. He cashed two spade tops, then four clubs. On playing the last, he also had a card in each major, North the spade 9 and heart A-10. West had to throw his spade Q, making South's J good, or break up his heart K-9, East holding the heart J. His goose was cooked. He tossed the spade, so declarer took in the spade J and the heart A to make contract.

YESTERDAY: Gayle is made a member of the Merrifield household when she is the first to answer the unusual advertisement that is answered by several hundred young women.

CHAPTER TWO

"IT'S ALL right, butler. I'm not the least bit afraid of him. I'm not afraid of anybody, see? I can't afford to be. But I've got to see him now! If that herd of females gets at him he'll be—"

Graham, the Merrifield butler who was already distressed at this day's unseemly routine, had come again into the master's study. At his heels this time was a strange young man. Of one accord Mr. Merrifield, Mr. Weems and Gayle Dixon turned to look.

The young man was decidedly in earnest—obviously he had forced himself right over poor Graham's authority—and yet he wore a happy smile, too. His hair was curly, and black. He was well dressed, and built like an athlete. He carried a hat with snapped-down brim.

"This gentleman has forced—" Graham began, but the young man grabbed the conversational reins.

"How do you do, everybody!" He turned to the three who sat before Mr. Merrifield's fireplace. "Thanks, butler; goodby. How do you do, everybody!" His repeating himself, while he quickly appraised the people and setting before him, caused Gayle Dixon to smile in amusement. Mr. Weems' mouth had dropped open, and Mr. Merrifield himself stared, incredulous.

"You are Mr. Merrifield, sir," the intruder resumed, addressing that gentleman unerringly. "I apologize for forcing my way in, but the truth is I've got to have work! Look, Mr. Merrifield, there are 500 girls down there now, and by the time you start seeing them at eight there'll be a thousand! Now, you can't handle that many in a month. I'm used to crowds and shoving and all that. I played football for four years—I'm just out of college—I can handle any kind of rush, and I can interview them for you. Now look, you give me some idea of what you want and I'll begin weeding them out so that you—"

"I—you—who— Mr. Weems stammered that.

"My name's Bill Bailey, and if you'll excuse me, sir, we haven't much time to wait. I don't care what you pay me. I've been trying to get a job since January and I'll take anything. I'll prove I can deliver the goods first. Okay, hunh?"

Mr. Merrifield was staring at him and working his old jaws, but no sound came. Poor Mr. Weems was indignant, haughty; Gayle highly amused. Most likely Mr. Merrifield—who had been a well-disciplined executive for half a century and more—would have said a great deal in another moment or two, but at the instant the flood began.

Some of the 500-odd girls evidently sensed that Bill Bailey and the butler would lead the way to the Merrifield sanctum, so the more daring ones had started their own trip upstairs. Others had followed instantly. Now the feminine mob was about to engulf the Merrifield study!

Bill Bailey was first to act. He jumped to a chair.

"Quiet! Quiet, everybody!" he shouted, commandingly. "Stand where you are! . . . Now listen, girls! Anybody who forces her way in will not be given a chance. Understand? All of you back out like ladies, doggone it, and start filing through that door one at a time! Mr. Merrifield—uh, he wants me to say that he thanks all of you very kindly and regrets that he can hire only one. I'll pick out six or eight for him to choose from, while he and his brother and granddaughter, or somebody, look on. Understand?"

He gave one hurried glance at the trio by the fireplace, then turned back to the mob. Girls had completely filled the great hallway outside the study and Bill talked loudly so that all those and even the others still on the stairway could hear. Mr. Merrifield and Mr. Weems looked helplessly at each other. Gayle Dixon was wide-eyed.

"Start walking by, slowly," Bill hurried on, with a positive air of authority. "Head out that other door yonder unless I take you out of the line. Miss—uh, you are Miss Merrifield or somebody, aren't you?"

He addressed Gayle for the first time.

"Yes, I—I really am somebody, but—" Gayle was quick-witted, too. She moved forward, ready to help.

"Okay. Now look—you lead the procession back outside again, eh? You know your way around this palace. Ought to be another way out somewhere. Your grandfather will be smothered in face powder if we don't act fast. Get me?"

"I get you!" Gayle stepped out, motioning to the girls to follow. She hoped—blindly hoped!—that a door across the room would lead somehow to an avenue of escape again, and fortunately it did.

The two old men said not a word for almost an hour.

They just stood by the fireplace and stared. Girls of every possible classification—there were even a few Chinese and one hopeful colored lass with very definite qualifications—passed in review before the astonishing Bill Bailey. Bill greeted each one cordially, spoke a kindly word or two, but hurried them all past.

Every few minutes he asked a girl to step out of the line and wait. When Gayle had the line strung out to the lawn again, and had worked herself back up stairs with her air of authority, she found nine beautiful girls waiting in some confusion.

Standing there by the door, she was conscious all at once of Jeremy Tucker at her elbow. Jeremy, the young grandson of Mr. Merrifield, who had appeared earlier in dressing robe and had been sent away, like a little boy, to make himself presentable.

"Oh, I say!" Jeremy stared in astonishment at the moving line of girls. "Whatever is—" He couldn't finish.

"These are girls who came in response to Mr. Merrifield's advertisement," Gayle explained. "They want to work for him. Poor dears!"

"This gentleman has forced . . ." Graham began.

"Oh, for goodness sake!" Jeremy fled.

Gayle wished he had stayed. She wanted to study him. He was the man she was hired to woo! That is, Mr. Merrifield had said he wanted her to make love to young Jeremy. Did Jeremy understand that arrangement?

Whew! All at once the possibility of that assailed Gayle. Her face showed deep concern and she wished she could ask Mr. Merrifield about it at once, but he was obviously too distracted now. Anyway, Gayle wasn't sure she wanted to woo a man for pay. Jeremy Tucker appeared decent enough, refined, really, but colorless.

In the end Bill had selected 12 possible candidates. Then he pitched in with gentleness but firmness, displaying a rare charm, to cut that 12 down to six. When only the six remained, he turned to Mr. Merrifield again.

"I think, sir, that you yourself will want to choose the final candidate. These I assure you are the six best looking, and I'll bet a red hat they're the smartest ones, too. Do you want the rest of us to get out so you can go into a private huddle with these girls?"

"Why—why, yes. No! No, I—yes!" Poor Mr. Merrifield. He was a brusque, direct man himself, but after all he was approaching 80 years of age.

A moment later, though, he found himself alone with the six maidens and he had regained his poise. He swelled a little, looked almost fierce.

There before him stood youth! Beautiful, hopeful youth. Confident youth. Old Mr. Merrifield just stared at them for a minute or so, then smiled benignly from where he sat in the swivel chair of his great desk.

But he never did address them there. Instead, he suddenly turned and banged a large hand down on a signal bell, then bellowed loudly.

"Mr. Weems, where are you?"

The secretary hurried back in. Gayle and Bill Bailey peered intently through the door he left open.

"Mr. Weems, confound it, put all six of these young ladies on the payroll at once! You hear me?"

"Oh, of course, sir! But what are they to do?"

"How in the devil do I know! And Mr. Weems—send that astonishing young Bailey back in here!

Children's Parties Should Have No Regrets

There'll Be No Aching Tummies Tomorrow if Your Menu's Wise

By LOUISE BENNETT WEAVER
AP Feature Service Writer

"Little Willie's not feeling well; he went to a party with the neighbor's children yesterday."

Why must mothers always be making such statements? There's no reason youngsters shouldn't have parties that are fun—and still be able to eat normally the next day.

Be a wise hostess; serve small guests the kind of food they are accustomed to eating. But be a pleasantly - remembered—hostess, too. Doll up that food so it won't seem like what it is.

For a spring party, baskets filled with sandwiches that have been made in special shapes, colors and fillings will delight children. Cottage cheese and currant jelly or minced chicken and lettuce make tasty fillings for Graham bread slices. For open - faced sandwiches, which help dress up your displays, mix some chopped broiled bacon, minced hard cooked eggs and parsley. Moisten the mixture slightly with cream and spread on small pieces of toast, cut into fancy shapes.

If you decide on a more substantial meal, serve Vegetable Croustades. They're simply good healthy creamed vegetables on toast, but they look very partyish. Cut white bread in two-inch squares or rounds, butter them well on both sides and toast them. When it's time to serve them, cover them generously with creamed peas, carrots and turnips, or creamed green beans, potatoes and hard-cooked eggs. Press the yolks of hard cooked eggs through a sieve and sprinkle the golden crumbs over the tops of each heap. Stick a tiny sprig of cress or parsley in the top for the final gay fillip.

Here's a children's party cake that will prevent squabbles—with every guest's name on his piece he can't claim any other.

Shapes of familiar things always intrigue children. Take that idea into the kitchen when you prepare for their parties. Don't serve this dish, for instance, as mere creamed chicken and roll. That's what it is, but introduce it as a luncheon boat or some other nautical name, for it does look something like a boat. Scoop the centers out of hard rolls and toast the shells; then fill them with creamed white fish and peas or with creamed chicken and rice. Serve a green gelatin salad with the boats—but cut the gelatin into star shapes, for interest.

We won't serve milk or cocoa at this party; too prosaic. We'll give them Fruit Nog; it has a funny sounding name, but it's no stomach-ache-producer. To serve six, soak, for 10 minutes, 2 cups of orange juice, ½ cup of pineapple juice, ¼ cup of lemon juice and ½ cup granulated sugar. Slowly pour in a quart of chilled milk. Place in a chilled shaker or large covered fruit jar and shake until a little frothy, then quickly fill tall glasses. Sprinkle lightly with grated orange peel. Serve with colored straws and watch how the youngster will go for it.

For dessert, how about letting the kids eat a bouquet? Take your sherbert cups and arrange small balls of orange, lemon and green - colored pineapple ices in each, like round flowers. You can add some paper leaves, to make the bouquet a little more realistic. Cake? Of course. Frost it all over with white icing, then stod the icing with tiny, varicolored gumdrops — jewels, you can call them.

For the favors, put small baskets at each place. Fill the baskets with sugar candies or sugar-coated popcorn and don't forget to hide some tiny toy in each basket.

Children's Party Cakes

2 cups sifted cake flour
2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
⅔ cup butter or other shortening
2 cups sugar
6 eggs, well beaten
4 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs and beat well. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Bake in greased pan, 16 x 10 x 2 inches, in moderate oven (350 F.) 35 minutes, or until done. Cut with fancy cutter or sharp knife. Spread with Seven Minute Frosting and outline names with Chocolate Wonder Frosting.

Seven Minute Frosting

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
5 tablespoons water
1½ teaspoons light corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla

Combine egg whites, sugar, water, and corn syrup in top of double boiler, beating with rotary egg beater until thoroughly mixed. Place over rapidly boiling water, beat constantly with rotary egg beater, and cook 7 minutes, or until frosting will stand in peaks. Remove from boiling water, add vanilla and beat frosting until thick enough to spread.

More Male Cooks Needed, He Says

Philadelphia, May 3 — American youth is overlooking a "depression-proof" profession—cooking.

It's a profession, says Chef William Sprinzing, of the select Germantown Cricket Club, that has openings for skilled men, is definitely NOT a woman's job (outside the home) and has a future.

Sprinzing, whose guests in his 12 years at the cricket club have included visitors to Davis Cup tennis matches, explains: "People must eat and it's a good profession for young men. In cooking like many other branches of American life, there is a shortage of skilled men."

The reason, he holds, is that 90 per cent of America's better chefs have come from Europe, but immigration laws have curtailed that supply. So far, says Sprinzing, Americans have shown little interest in the art.

"The average American," says the 41-year-old German-born chef, "just wants to drive into a restaurant and get filled up as fast as possible. No wonder there is so much stomach trouble in this country! The average American is NOT well educated in eating."

Sprinzing thinks America needs an apprentice system for cooks and licenses for chefs.

"A nation travels on its stomach, so why, then, let unskilled men feed it?" Sprinzing asks. "We want cooking to be a profession and recognized as such."

Uncooked Greens

The human appetite for green foods appears to reach its peak in the spring. According to dieticians, more of the vital food elements greens contain are retained by the body if such foods are served uncooked. Cress (either water or land), lettuce, endive and so on are delicious when served raw with mayonnaise, French dressing or a hot vinegar sauce.

Need Beating

Certain frozen desserts need several beatings during the freezing process. To give them a better texture, pour them into a bowl that has been chilled and beat with a chilled beater.

Breaking the Monotony In Beans and Tomatoes

Canned string beans become monotonous if served too frequently as plain string beans. To avoid this, combine the beans with other foods, such as tomatoes, meats and so on. This recipe for string beans and tomatoes calls for these ingredients: four cups finely chopped canned string beans, two cups canned tomatres, one cup chopped onion, two tablespoons butter, two teaspoons sugar, one teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon pepper and two whole cloves. Brown the onion lightly in the butter, add the tomatoes, seasonings and sugar, and bring to a boil. Then add the beans and cook until tender.

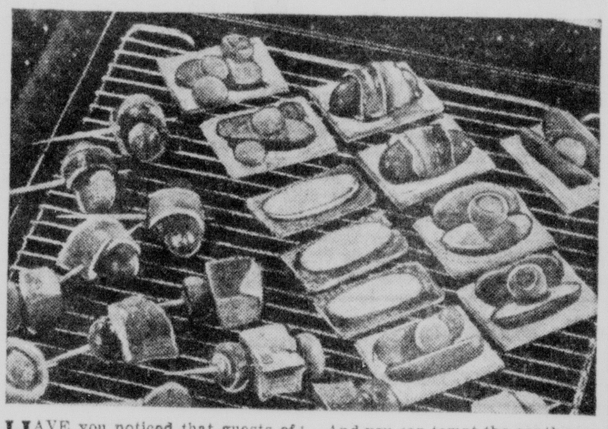

Thicker for Broiling

Buy lamb chops for broiling from two-thirds to two inches thick. Lamb chops thinner than that will dry out before entirely cooked.

Boiled Salad Dressing

For a quickly prepared salad dressing, combine one-fourth tablespoon salt, one teaspoon dry mustard, one and a half tablespoons sugar, one and a half tablespoons flour, one beaten egg, three-fourths cup water, one-fourth cup vinegar and a few grains of cayenne pepper. Blend and cook in double boiler until thick. Strain and cool.

Men Prefer Canapes Hot

HAVE you noticed that guests of the male gender linger longest in the vicinity of the heartier hot canapes, and avoid the cold tidbit variety? They know there's nothing like the open flame of a modern gas range broiler to point up the flavor of a canape and give it zest.

Men favor the cocktail frankfurter wrapped in bacon, alone or reposing upon a wafer, broiled to a turn. And they do not pass up the broiled three-bite type of a cube of ham stuck on a wooden pick with a canned button mushroom at each end, as illustrated above. Such small mushrooms are delicious when wrapped in a strip of bacon and broiled until the bacon cooks.

And you can tempt the gentlemen with a slice of cheese broiled on a rye wafer; or a spread of Welsh Rarebit mixture upon a crisp cracker, topped with a thin square of bacon, which should be broiled from five to seven minutes before garnishing with a slice of stuffed olive. Shrimp is extra good when rolled in a half slice of bacon held by a wooden pick and broiled until the bacon is browned on both sides.

Fancier canapes are liked by women guests,—such as one-half cup each of cooked chopped chicken and ham moistened to a paste with mayonnaise, then spread on rounds of bread or crackers, sprinkled with grated cheese and broiled.

Horseradish Sauce

Few relishes give meats and fish quite the tang that horseradish preparations do. Some vegetables and salads also gain in flavor by the addition of a bit of the bitey root. A good horseradish sauce may be made by whipping a half cup cream until firm, then adding four tablespoons horseradish, half a teaspoon sugar and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Another sauce is made by simply adding grated or prepared horseradish to tomato sauce or juice.

Fruited Ice Cubes

Decorative ice cubes for the punch bowl are easy to make if you have a mechanical refrigerator. First fill the ice cube trays to the half-way mark (only) with water and place them in the freezing unit. When the water is partially frozen, insert the fruit in each cube — lemon slices, orange rind, fresh berries, cherries and so on. A few mint leaves may be added to furnish contrasting color. Then fill the trays with more water and freeze.

Left-over string beans will not linger long if served as follows: Split baking powder biscuits in half and butter. Place a spoonful of string beans on each half biscuit and cover with hot tomato or white sauce just before serving.

Children's Parties Should Have No Regrets

By LOUISE BENNETT WEAVER
AP Feature Service Writer

"Little Willie's not feeling well; he went to a party with the neighbor's children yesterday."

Why must mothers always be making such statements? There's no reason youngsters shouldn't have parties that are fun—and still be able to eat normally the next day.

Be a wise hostess; serve small guests the kind of food they are accustomed to eating. But be a pleasantly - remembered hostess, too. Doll up that food so it won't seem like what it is.

For a spring party, baskets filled with sandwiches that have been made in special shapes, colors and fillings will delight children. Cottage cheese and currant jelly or minced chicken and lettuce make tasty fillings for Graham bread slices. For open - faced sandwiches, which help dress up your displays, mix some chopped broiled bacon, minced hard cooked eggs and parsley. Moisten the mixture slightly with cream and spread on small pieces of toast, cut into fancy shapes.

If you decide on a more substantial meal, serve Vegetable Croustades. They're simply good healthy creamed vegetables on toast, but they look very partyish. Cut white bread in two-inch squares or rounds, butter them well on both sides and toast them. When it's time to serve them, cover them generously with creamed peas, carrots and turnips, or creamed green beans, potatoes and hard-cooked eggs. Press the yolks of hard cooked eggs through a sieve and sprinkle the golden crumbs over the tops of each heap. Stick a tiny sprig of cress or parsley in the top for the final gay fillip.

Here's a children's party cake that will prevent squabbles—with every guest's name on his piece he can't claim any other.

Shapes of familiar things always intrigue children. Take that idea into the kitchen when you prepare for their parties. Don't serve this dish, for instance, as mere creamed chicken and roll. That's what it is, but introduce it as a luncheon boat or some other nautical name, for it does look something like a boat. Scoop the centers out of hard rolls and toast the shells; then fill them with creamed white fish and peas or with creamed chicken and rice. Serve a green gelatin salad with the boats—but cut the gelatin into star shapes, for interest.

We won't serve milk or cocoa at this party; too prosaic. We'll give them Fruit Nog; it has a funny sounding name, but it's no stomach-ache-producer. To serve six, soak, for 10 minutes, 2 cups of orange juice, ½ cup of pineapple juice, ¼ cup of lemon juice and ½ cup granulated sugar. Slowly pour in a quart of chilled milk. Place in a chilled shaker or large covered fruit jar and shake until a little frothy, then quickly fill tall glasses. Sprinkle lightly with grated orange peel. Serve with colored straws and watch how the youngster will go for it.

For dessert, how about letting the kids eat a bouquet? Take your sherbert cups and arrange small balls of orange, lemon and green - colored pineapple ices in each, like round flowers. You can add some paper leaves, to make the bouquet a little more realistic. Cake? Of course. Frost it all over with white icing, then stod the icing with tiny, varicolored gumdrops — jewels, you can call them.

For the favors, put small baskets at each place. Fill the baskets with sugar candies or sugar-coated popcorn and don't forget to hide some tiny toy in each basket.

Children's Party Cakes

2 cups sifted cake flour
2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
⅔ cup butter or other shortening
2 cups sugar
6 eggs, well beaten
4 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs and beat well. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Bake in greased pan, 16 x 10 x 2 inches, in moderate oven (350 F.) 35 minutes, or until done. Cut with fancy cutter or sharp knife. Spread with Seven Minute Frosting and outline names with Chocolate Wonder Frosting.

Seven Minute Frosting

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
5 tablespoons water
1½ teaspoons light corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla

Combine egg whites, sugar, water, and corn syrup in top of double boiler, beating with rotary egg beater until thoroughly mixed. Place over rapidly boiling water, beat constantly with rotary egg beater, and cook 7 minutes, or until frosting will stand in peaks. Remove from boiling water, add vanilla and beat frosting until thick enough to spread.

More Male Cooks Needed, He Says

Philadelphia, May 3 — American youth is overlooking a "depression-proof" profession—cooking.

It's a profession, says Chef William Sprinzing, of the select Germantown Cricket Club, that has openings for skilled men, is definitely NOT a woman's job (outside the home) and has a future.

Sprinzing, whose guests in his 12 years at the cricket club have included visitors to Davis Cup tennis matches, explains: "People must eat and it's a good profession for young men. In cooking like many other branches of American life, there is a shortage of skilled men."

The reason, he holds, is that 90 per cent of America's better chefs have come from Europe, but immigration laws have curtailed that supply. So far, says Sprinzing, Americans have shown little interest in the art.

"The average American," says the 41-year-old German-born chef, "just wants to drive into a restaurant and get filled up as fast as possible. No wonder there is so much stomach trouble in this country! The average American is NOT well educated in eating."

Sprinzing thinks America needs an apprentice system for cooks and licenses for chefs.

"A nation travels on its stomach, so why, then, let unskilled men feed it?" Sprinzing asks. "We want cooking to be a profession and recognized as such."

Uncooked Greens

The human appetite for green foods appears to reach its peak in the spring. According to dieticians, more of the vital food elements greens contain are retained by the body if such foods are served uncooked. Cress (either water or land), lettuce, endive and so on are delicious when served raw with mayonnaise, French dressing or a hot vinegar sauce.

Need Beating

Certain frozen desserts need several beatings during the freezing process. To give them a better texture, pour them into a bowl that has been chilled and beat with a chilled beater.

Breaking the Monotony In Beans and Tomatoes

Canned string beans become monotonous if served too frequently as plain string beans. To avoid this, combine the beans with other foods, such as tomatoes, meats and so on. This recipe for string beans and tomatoes calls for these ingredients: four cups finely chopped canned string beans, two cups canned tomatoes, one cup chopped onion, two tablespoons butter, two teaspoons sugar, one teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon pepper and two whole cloves. Brown the onion lightly in the butter, add the tomatoes, seasonings and sugar, and bring to a boil. Then add the beans and cook until tender.

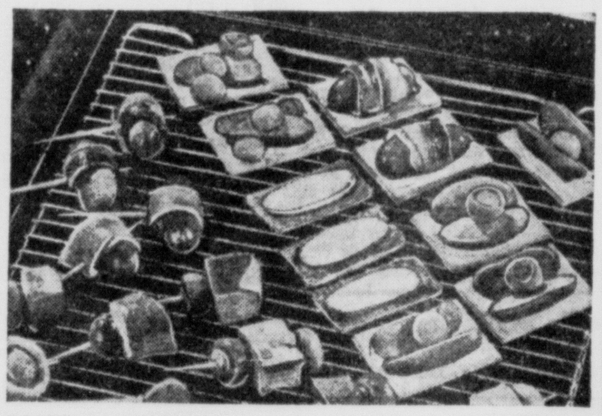

Thicker for Broiling

Buy lamb chops for broiling from two-thirds to two inches thick. Lamb chops thinner than that will dry out before entirely cooked.

Boiled Salad Dressing

For a quickly prepared salad dressing, combine one-fourth tablespoon salt, one teaspoon dry mustard, one and a half tablespoons sugar, one and a half tablespoons flour, one beaten egg, three-fourths cup water, one-fourth cup vinegar and a few grains of cayenne pepper. Blend and cook in double boiler until thick. Strain and cool.

Men Prefer Canapes Hot

HAVE you noticed that guests of the male gender linger longest in the vicinity of the heartier hot canapes, and avoid the cold tidbit variety? They know there's nothing like the open flame of a modern gas range broiler to point up the flavor of a canape and give it zest.

Men favor the cocktail frankfurter wrapped in bacon, alone or reposing upon a wafer, broiled to a turn. And they do not pass up the broiled three-bite type of a cube of ham stuck on a wooden pick with a canned button mushroom at each end, as illustrated above. Such small mushrooms are delicious when wrapped in a strip of bacon and broiled until the bacon cooks.

And you can tempt the gentlemen with a slice of cheese broiled on a rye wafer; or a spread of Welsh Rarebit mixture upon a crisp cracker, topped with a thin square of bacon, which should be broiled from five to seven minutes before garnishing with a slice of stuffed olive. Shrimp is extra good when rolled in a half slice of bacon held by a wooden pick and broiled until the bacon is browned on both sides.

Fancier canapes are liked by women guests,—such as one-half cup each of cooked chopped chicken and ham moistened to a paste with mayonnaise, then spread on rounds of bread or crackers, sprinkled with grated cheese and broiled.

Horseradish Sauce

Few relishes give meats and fish quite the tang that horseradish preparations do. Some vegetables and salads also gain in flavor by the addition of a bit of the bitey root. A good horseradish sauce may be made by whipping a half cup cream until firm, then adding four tablespoons horseradish, half a teaspoon sugar and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Another sauce is made by simply adding grated or prepared horseradish to tomato sauce or juice.

Fruited Ice Cubes

Decorative ice cubes for the punch bowl are easy to make if you have a mechanical refrigerator. First fill the ice cube trays to the half-way mark (only) with water and place them in the freezing unit. When the water is partially frozen, insert the fruit in each cube — lemon slices, orange rind, fresh berries, cherries and so on. A few mint leaves may be added to furnish contrasting color. Then fill the trays with more water and freeze.

Left-over string beans will not linger long if served as follows: Split baking powder biscuits in half and butter. Place a spoonful of string beans on each half biscuit and cover with hot tomato or white sauce just before serving.

Isaiah Gives God's Invitation

ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By Alfred J. Buescher

Scripture—Isaiah 55.

"Seek ye the Lord while He may be found, call ye upon Him while he is near." Isaiah, the greatest of the prophets, tells those who are unhappy.

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him."

For the rain cometh down, and watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, so shall My word be, says God.

"Ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace" if ye will but follow in the way of our Lord.
(GOLDEN TEXT—Isaiah 55:6)

Isaiah Gives God's Invitation

HIGHLIGHTS ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

5-4

(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for May 5 is Isaiah 55, the Golden Text being Isaiah 55:6, "Seek ye Jehovah while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near.")

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

THE WHOLE of the 55th chapter of Isaiah should be memorized, as its message is written in such beautiful language, but more especially for its invitation to leave the things that bring no real happiness and to come unto the Lord, and partake of the big things of life that satisfy.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken deligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fastness."

This fare we are offered, of course, is not food for the body, but spiritual nourishment which leaves no indigestion or unpleasantness, but gives one comfort and joy.

As a good mother knows what is best to feed her children, so God knows what is good for us—what will bring us refreshment for our souls, peace and rest, real happiness.

Things Bring no Joy

Why do we spend money on mere material things? We must eat to live, of course, and we must have clothing and homes in which to live, but much of our money goes for things that really don't make us any happier. We grow tired of them, disillusioned with what earth has to offer us of pleasure. What is wrong? Our souls are hungry for spiritual food, and they can only be satisfied by it. "Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live: and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David," Isaiah says.

And again: "Seek ye Jehovah while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near:

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

That is the way to be happy and secure, whether times are good or bad, and even when grief and tragedy come to us. We can repent of our wrong-doing, turn to the good, and rest on the promises of the Lord. "He will abundantly pardon," for He is merciful, and pardon follows mercy.

God's ways and His thoughts are far higher than ours. The prophet reports Jehovah as saying: "For My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways My ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts.

"For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: So shall my word be . . .

"For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

"Instead of the thorn shall come forth the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

Haven't you been out in the country, or in some peaceful place where the mountains did indeed seem to "break forth into singing," and the trees to "clap their hands?" In other words, because your soul was happy and peaceful, all nature seemed in tune with your mood. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we always could feel like that? If this peace "that passeth understanding," could be ours because we "cast our burden on the Lord," and we are forgiven of our sins and all is well?

Isaiah Gives God's Invitation — ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON — By Alfred J. Buescher

Scripture—Isaiah 55.

"Seek ye the Lord while He may be found, call ye upon Him while he is near." Isaiah, the greatest of the prophets, tells those who are unhappy.

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him."

For the rain cometh down, and watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, so shall My word be, says God.

"Ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace" if ye will but follow in the way of our Lord. (GOLDEN TEXT—Isaiah 55:6)

Isaiah Gives God's Invitation

HIGHLIGHTS ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

5-4

(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for May 5 is Isaiah 55, the Golden Text being Isaiah 55:6, "Seek ye Jehovah while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near.")

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

THE WHOLE of the 55th chapter of Isaiah should be memorized, as its message is written in such beautiful language, but more especially for its invitation to leave the things that bring no real happiness and to come unto the Lord, and partake of the big things of life that satisfy.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken deligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fastness."

This fare we are offered, of course, is not food for the body, but spiritual nourishment which leaves no indigestion or unpleasantness, but gives one comfort and joy.

As a good mother knows what is best to feed her children, so God knows what is good for us—what will bring us refreshment for our souls, peace and rest, real happiness.

Things Bring no Joy

Why do we spend money on mere material things? We must eat to live, of course, and we must have clothing and homes in which to live, but much of our money goes for things that really don't make us any happier. We grow tired of them, disillusioned with what earth has to offer us of pleasure. What is wrong? Our souls are hungry for spiritual food, and they can only be satisfied by it. "Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live: and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David," Isaiah says.

And again: "Seek ye Jehovah while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near:

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

That is the way to be happy and secure, whether times are good or bad, and even when grief and tragedy come to us. We can repent of our wrong-doing, turn to the good, and rest on the promises of the Lord. "He will abundantly pardon," for He is merciful, and pardon follows mercy.

God's ways and His thoughts are far higher than ours. The prophet reports Jehovah as saying: "For My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways My ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts.

"For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: So shall my word be . . .

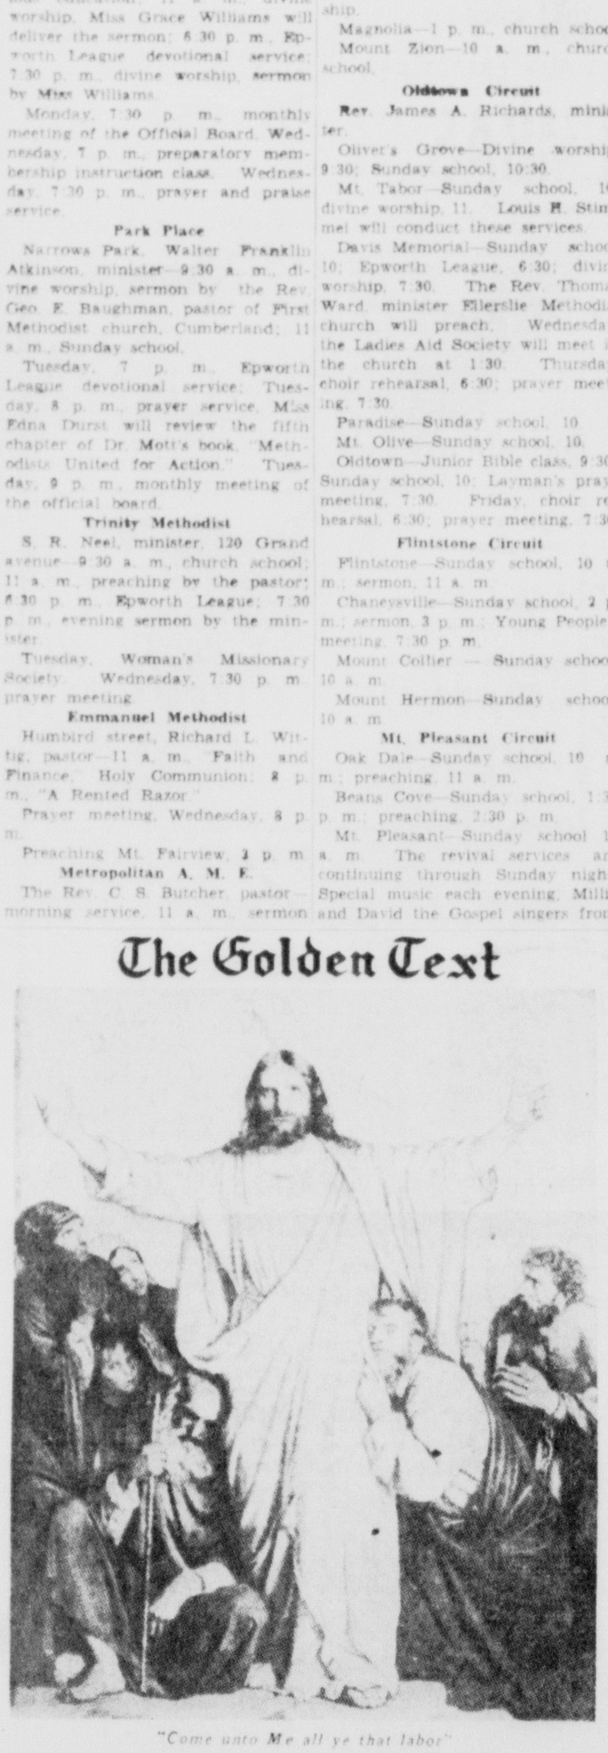

"For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

"Instead of the thorn shall come forth the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

Haven't you been out in the country, or in some peaceful place where the mountains did indeed seem to "break forth into singing," and the trees to "clap their hands?" In other words, because your soul was happy and peaceful, all nature seemed in tune with your mood. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we always could feel like that? If this peace "that passeth understanding" could be ours because we "cast our burden on the Lord," and we are forgiven of our sins and all is well?

Stocks Swing Up and Down in Fast Trading, but End Day with Gains

War Influences Have Much To Do with Million Share Day

By FREDERICK GARDNER

New York, May 3. (AP)—It was a swing-high-swing-low stock market today with war influences providing the motivation for rapidly shifting trends.

The list nose-dived in the forenoon but on a sudden rebound reduced losses running to two or more points or transformed them into gains of as much.

Final advances were well under the best and declines were widely distributed.

Transfers expanded to 1,070,750 shares from 645,420 the day before. It was the first million-share day since April 19.

Ending with plus marks were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Douglas Aircraft, du Point, Consolidated Edison, Baldwin Locomotive and International Paper.

Chrysler was down 1¼ as some disappointment was shown over failure of directors to declare a larger dividend. U. S. Rubber common and preferred, together with Montgomery Ward, hit new low for 1940.

Up as much as a point or so in the Curb were Aluminum of America, Hammermill paper, Pantepec and American Republics. American export lines slipped, as did Sherwin Williams, Reed Roller and Todd Shipyards. Turnover here was around 264,000 shares against 197,000 Thursday.

Headed by Clark Gable and Joan Crawford, who deliver two of the strongest characterizations of their film careers, an "all name" cast of epic proportions makes "Strange Cargo" one of the thrilling experiences of the year. The film is now showing at the Maryland theatre.

Gable is seen as Verne Andre, convict, who escapes a South American penal colony, and Miss Crawford as Julie, a cynical cafe entertainer who is forced to join him in his flight. In addition to this outstanding cast, all of whom turn in unforgettable performances, Peter Lorre contributes a memorable portrayal as the repulsive libere, Monsieur Pig; Victor Varconi is humbly simple as the fisherman who must aid the survivors of the escape; Frederic Worlock blends justice with understanding as the prison governor, Grideau; and Bernard Nedell scores as Marfeu.

"Young Buffalo Bill" Shows at Embassy

Closing today at the Embassy theater is the double feature attraction, Roy Rogers in "Young Buffalo Bill" with George "Gabby" Hayes and an all star supporting cast and Fredric March and Joan Bennett in "Trade Winds," with Ann Southern and Ralph Bellamy in the supporting roles. In addition to the two hits there will be another chapter of the serial "The Shadow."

Opening tomorrow at the Embassy theater will be the outdoor drama "Gentleman from Arizona," filmed in natural color and starring John King, J. Farrell MacDonald and Joan Barclay. The second hit is Metro Goldwyn Mayer's "Balalaika" starring Nelson Eddy and Ilona Massey, Charles Ruggles, Frank Morgan and Lionel Atwill will be seen in the supporting roles.

Jack Benny Film Showing at Strand

"Buck Benny Rides Again," opened yesterday at the Strand theater.

Not only Benny but most of his radio troupe forsake the microphone to don ten-gallon hats and head for the wide open spaces. Eddie "Rochester" Anderson is there to heckle his boss; Phil Harris lends his urbane presence; Andy Devine, and even Carmichael, the polar bear, add gusto to this new Benny production.

The result is lively entertainment which is the same as saying "tops for anybody." The picture is as funny as all get-out, which you might expect with Jack Benny playing a dynamic buckaroo under Rochester's critical eye. And Rochester, that old scene-rustler steals the show as usual with a side-splitting imitation of Fred Astaire, and a new dance which you

GOING OUR WAY!

Thumbing their way to the wide open spaces, Jack Benny and Phil Harris run into plenty of trouble on the range in Benny's newest vehicle, "Buck Benny Rides Again," which is now showing thru Wednesday at the Strand theater.

Stocks Swing Up and Down in Fast Trading, but End Day with Gains

War Influences Have Much To Do with Million Share Day

By FREDERICK GARDNER

New York, May 3. (AP)—It was a swing-high-swing-low stock market today with war influences providing the motivation for rapidly shifting trends.

The list nose-dived in the forenoon but on a sudden rebound reduced losses running to two or more points or transformed them into gains of as much.

Final advances were well under the best and declines were widely distributed.

Transfers expanded to 1,070,750 shares from 645,420 the day before. It was the first million-share day since April 19.

Ending with plus marks were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Douglas Aircraft, du Point, Consolidated Edison, Baldwin Locomotive and International Paper.

Chrysler was down 1¼ as some disappointment was shown over failure of directors to declare a larger dividend. U. S. Rubber common and preferred, together with Montgomery Ward, hit new low for 1940.

Up as much as a point or so in the Curb were Aluminum of America, Hammermill paper, Pantepec and American Republics. American export lines slipped, as did Sherwin Williams, Reed Roller and Todd Shipyards. Turnover here was around 264,000 shares against 197,000 Thursday.

Opening tomorrow at the Embassy theater will be the outdoor drama "Gentleman from Arizona," filmed in natural color and starring John King, J. Farrell MacDonald and Joan Barclay. The second hit is Metro Goldwyn Mayer's "Balalaika" starring Nelson Eddy and Ilona Massey, Charles Ruggles, Frank Morgan and Lionel Atwill will be seen in the supporting roles.

Jack Benny Film Showing at Strand

"Buck Benny Rides Again," opened yesterday at the Strand theater.

Not only Benny but most of his radio troupe forsake the microphone to don ten-gallon hats and head for the wide open spaces. Eddie "Rochester" Anderson is there to heckle his boss; Phil Harris lends his urbane presence; Andy Devine, and even Carmichael, the polar bear, add gusto to this new Benny production.

The result is lively entertainment which is the same as saying "tops for anybody." The picture is as funny as all get-out, which you might expect with Jack Benny playing a dynamic buckaroo under Rochester's critical eye. And Rochester, that old scene-rustler, steals the show as usual with a side-splitting imitation of Fred Astaire, and a new dance which you

GOING OUR WAY!

THE DAILY STORY

VAIN APPEAL

It Was a Case of Finding a Certain Lady with Red Hair and Incidentally a $40,000 Necklace

By MARY DRAKE

"That was a peach of a story you turned in on the Cheshire case, Tony," the city editor grudgingly admitted as he fingered the three-day-old clipping of the entrapment of the $100,000 smoothie, Manning Cheshire. "You and the commissioner must be brother Elks, the way he gave you a clear field when they broke into that hideaway!"

"The commissioner recognizes true merit when he sees it, Roark," Tony O'Malley modestly pointed out, "which is something more than I can say for some members of the Dispatch staff!"

The city editor tossed the clippings on the desk wearily.

"In this business," he suggested pointedly, "yesterday's headlines are as dead as one of the Egyptian pharoahs . . . unless they're topped by something bigger and better on the same angle. Cheshire's moll is still at large, Tony, and she has a $40,000 diamond necklace Cheshire talked Molly Fairchild out of!"

"Redheads!" The Ad Read

"I'll get that story, too, when the commissioner is ready to have it break," Tony promised easily.

"That's right," Roark agreed just as off-handedly, and then bored his gaze straight through his pet reporter. "Only you have the order incorrectly, Mr. O'Malley. You'll give the story to the commissioner this time, because I'm assigning you to find the redhead!"

Tony shrugged helplessly, indicating with his eloquent shoulders the deplorable unreasonableness of city editors. "Have a heart, Roark," he pleaded. "Bonus?"

"Either a bonus, or back to covering night beat on the stations out in the sticks!"

"You seem to think that it's a great joke, my pet," Tony complained suspiciously to Kitty O'Malley (nee Carlton), that evening at dinner. "Roark knows darned well that the commissioner has been keeping the wires hot for the last three days trying to get a line on this dame. How does he expect me to pick her right out of the air?"

"I thought that newspapermen knew everything," Kitty grinned sweetly over her dessert, "or at least I did before I married you darling! After all, you certainly have more brains than a flatfoot."

Tony gulped his coffee. "Sarcasm is unseemly in a spouse, my little white dove," he reprimanded, grinning. "This thing is tossed right in my lap, and I'd love to beat the boys to the punch. But everyone from the commissioner down has been running in circles because the Fairchild gal is squawking her ears off!"

"I'd love to help you, Tony, but I remember what you said about my doing any gumshoe work," she observed.

"You've retired, all right," he admitted. "I compliment you on seeing the light. What did you do today?"

"Oh, I shopped in the morning, and took a walk in the park for my exercise, and spent the afternoon in a beauty shop, just like the average wife is supposed to do."

"Think you're going to like it?" Tony, questioned, coming around the table to implant a kiss behind her ear.

"I'll have to make the best of my bargain, I suppose. I'm even learning some of the tricks every competent wife should know. I have your evening paper ready near the easy chair and your slippers too. You make yourself comfortable while I wash the dishes!"

Tony subsided comfortably in unaccustomed case and picked the paper up from the coffee table. It was folded over at the classified advertisement section, and Tony ran his eye down the columns from force of habit. A boxed ad with a single word in large type jumped out at him.

"REDHEADS!" the ad read, under the business personals. Tony scanned the small type below it with interest, "The Superba Salon offers $500 or a year's free beauty service to the most perfect titian specimen to enter our contest. No names used. Enter our simple contest today!"

Tony thought rapidly of the details of the missing accomplice of Manning Cheshire. About 30 and showing more years than that in a hard sort of way, he had heard. Manning had said that she took no money from the haul, taking instead the rope of diamonds because they caught her fancy. She had no money, and according to Cheshire, no connections in the city. This was a break, this contest, and a sure-fire hunch!

The Superba Salon was at the far side of town, on the edge of a smart suburb, and early the following morning Tony was engrossed with the manageress. She was giving him details of the contest and showing him sample picture of the contestants to date.

"It's worth the price of the prize to you to pick this entrant as winner," he offered with suppressed exultation, stipulating, "if you have her claim the prize in person, and let me know when it will be awarded!" In his hand he held a photograph of the missing woman . . . about her slim neck the actual necklace with which she had disappeared!

"A friend of yours . . . your girl friend, perhaps?" the beauty operator smiled knowingly, scenting a profitable deal.

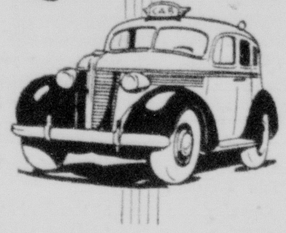

"I only want her to get what she deserves," he suggested quietly, pleased at himself for his pleasantry. "It's a deal, then!"

The Dispatch got a clear start of three hours on the story when the men from the commissioner's office walked in on Cheshire's abscounded partner and caught her with the gems sewn in her coat lining. Tony got his bonus, his name was featured as a newshawk genius, and Molly Fairchild sent him a check for a sizable amount in sincere appreciation.

"You've got a smart man for a husband, Kitty darling!" he told her boastfully, and she agreed with a smile. He wasn't so sure when the monthly bills came in, however. One was for $100 from the Superba Beauty Salon for service rendered; the second for a five-day insertion of a classified ad in the Dispatch. —Distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

Prosecution in McKenna Trial Is Accused of Making Political Speech

Charleston, W. Va., May 3. (AP)—Closing prosecution arguments brought defense protests of "political speech" today as the trial of C. P. McKenna, accused of postal law violations, neared the jury.

McKenna, chief of the state employment service, is charged with using government franked envelopes in sending out letters dealing with a "benefit fund among employes of that division of the State Employment Compensation department.

Arguments of counsel were completed before Federal Judge George W. McClintic adjourned court until tomorrow morning, when the jury will hear his charge.

U. S. District Attorney L. R. Via, in his argument, asserted:

"Under a Republican administration McKenna would not have been permitted to do the things he has done under this administration."

Benefit Fund Letters

Via referred to the "benefit fund" letters, which Senator M. M. Neely among others has referred to in connection with charges of "extortion" from state employes for political purposes, as having been written in 1938—an election year.

R. S. Spilman, Sr., of defense counsel, immediately protested and characterized the district attorney's remarks as a "political speech."

Judge McClintic overruled the objection, holding that Via had the right to comment on the nature of the letters.

The case has been based in three letters to J. Thomas Lane, resigned district manager at Clarksburg, who testified the "benefit" fund was mentioned in missives which came in franked envelopes.

McKenna's defense was that on the days in question in 1938 he also sent Lane "official" letters and the envelopes had been switched.

Letters Given Neely

Lane turned the letters over to Neely, who in turn gave them to Via after reading them on the floor of the Senate March 8, and charging they were proof of collection of campaign funds in West Virginia.

Via attacking testimony of McKenna's secretary, Marie Chafin, who was a defense witness, said:

"If he (McKenna) could intimidate his employes to give up two per cent (an amount mentioned in the "benefit" fund letter) he could intimidate this woman."

Charles Ritchie, defense attorney, said in his closing argument that testimony showed Lane bore a "certain amount of ill feeling" toward McKenna and that Lane had "a desire to see him convicted under a false charge."

He attacked, as did Spilman later, Lane's testimony that the private letters he received from McKenna were in the "official" non-stamp covers.

John Hereford, assistant U. S. district attorney, criticized statements by Mrs. Chafin, as "guessing" and accused another witness of "timidity."

Riggle, extension animal husbandman, Morgantown, and Emerson Gregory, livestock specialist from the State Department of Agriculture, Charleston, were in Moorefield yesterday helping S. L. The morning session was held at the Inskeep hall where a picture showing the most modern methods of shearing sheep was shown. Talks were made by the visitors.

While no local service agency has been definitely named to represent Southern States, negotiations are under way, and such an announcement will probably be made in the near future. The cooperative manufactures by open formula a variety of top-grade feeds and fertilizers.

Prosecution in McKenna Trial Is Accused of Making Political Speech

Charleston, W. Va., May 3. (AP)—Closing prosecution arguments brought defense protests of "political speech" today as the trial of C. P. McKenna, accused of postal law violations, neared the jury.

McKenna, chief of the state employment service, is charged with using government franked envelopes in sending out letters dealing with a "benefit fund among employes of that division of the State Employment Compensation department.

Arguments of counsel were completed before Federal Judge George W. McClintic adjourned court until tomorrow morning, when the jury will hear his charge.

U. S. District Attorney L. R. Via, in his argument, asserted:

"Under a Republican administration McKenna would not have been permitted to do the things he has done under this administration."

Benefit Fund Letters

Via referred to the "benefit fund" letters, which Senator M. M. Neely among others has referred to in connection with charges of "extortion" from state employes for political purposes, as having been written in 1938—an election year.

R. S. Spilman, Sr., of defense counsel, immediately protested and characterized the district attorney's remarks as a "political speech."

Judge McClintic overruled the objection, holding that Via had the right to comment on the nature of the letters.

The case has been based in three letters to J. Thomas Lane, resigned district manager at Clarksburg, who testified the "benefit" fund was mentioned in missives which came in franked envelopes.

McKenna's defense was that on the days in question in 1938 he also sent Lane "official" letters and the envelopes had been switched.

Letters Given Neely

Lane turned the letters over to Neely, who in turn gave them to Via after reading them on the floor of the Senate March 8, and charging they were proof of collection of campaign funds in West Virginia.

Via attacking testimony of McKenna's secretary, Marie Chafin, who was a defense witness, said:

"If he (McKenna) could intimidate his employes to give up two per cent (an amount mentioned in the "benefit" fund letter) he could intimidate this woman."

Charles Ritchie, defense attorney, said in his closing argument that testimony showed Lane bore a "certain amount of ill feeling" toward McKenna and that Lane had "a desire to see him convicted under a false charge."

He attacked, as did Spilman later, Lane's testimony that the private letters he received from McKenna were in the "official" non-stamp covers.

John Hereford, assistant U. S. district attorney, criticized statements by Mrs. Chafin, as "guessing" and accused another witness of "timidity."

Neal Charges WPA Workers Ordered To Pay to Neely Fun

Coniends Men Ordered To Pay Fixed Amounts

Huntington Man Charges Neely Is Not Suited for Governor

Huntington, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—George I. Neal, former district attorney for Southern West Virginia, charged tonight that "WPA workers right here in Cabell county were commanded to pay certain fixed sums of money to a Neely campaign fund x x x."

Neal, speaking on the radio in furtherance of the candidacy of State Chairman R. Carl Andrews, who is opposing Neely for the Democratic nomination for governor, said in a prepared address:

Pay in Cash

I know that many men and women did respond to the hold-up and paid the cash (not check) in the amount demanded; that this took place in recent weeks; that it was recently investigated by federal investigators and found to be true; and that five men have, to date, lost their jobs on account thereof."

"We also know that certain federal office holders in West Virginia have responded to like calls for a Neely campaign fund, accumulating a fund of large proportions. His (Neely's) talk about the campaign funds of the "statehouse" appears to have been a smokescreen, or cover-up, for the work of his men along more extensive lines."

Neal said that he had heard the speech of Senator Neely from Charleston last night and that "I now submit x x x whether or not Senator Neely is of the temperament demanded for the high office of governor."

"If the candidates whom I support," he continued, "should make a public talk so filled with personal hatred, personal vindictiveness, and madness as that of Senator Neely I would without hesitation withdraw my support of him."

Praises Andrews' Ability

Andrews, said Neal, "is endowed with that rare possession known as high executive ability—organizing ability — which the office demands, yes requires."

Neely "may be, and is, qualified for the duties of a senator, for he has spent a life time in the Congress of the United States," said Neal. The duties of a senator call for little or no executive ability or ability for organizing men and things."

Pointing to charges that Neely is a candidate "on demand" of CIO leaders, Neal inquired "what will be his line of defense to their demands, if and when he is elected to the office of governor?"

Neal Charges WPA Workers Ordered To Pay to Neely Fun

Contends Men Ordered To Pay Fixed Amounts

Huntington Man Charges Neely Is Not Suited for Governor

Huntington, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—George I. Neal, former district attorney for Southern West Virginia, charged tonight that "WPA workers right here in Cabell county were commanded to pay certain fixed sums of money to a Neely campaign fund x x x."

Neal, speaking on the radio in furtherance of the candidacy of State Chairman R. Carl Andrews, who is opposing Neely for the Democratic nomination for governor, said in a prepared address:

Pay in Cash

"I know that many men and women did respond to the hold-up and paid the cash (not check) in the amount demanded; that this took place in recent weeks; that it was recently investigated by federal investigators and found to be true; and that five men have, to date, lost their jobs on account thereof."

"We also know that certain federal office holders in West Virginia have responded to like calls for a Neely campaign fund, accumulating a fund of large proportions. His (Neely's) talk about the campaign funds of the "statehouse" appears to have been a smokescreen, or cover-up, for the work of his men along more extensive lines."

Neal said that he had heard the speech of Senator Neely from Charleston last night and that "I now submit x x x whether or not Senator Neely is of the temperament demanded for the high office of governor."

"If the candidates whom I support," he continued, "should make a public talk so filled with personal hatred, personal vindictiveness, and madness as that of Senator Neely I would without hesitation withdraw my support of him."

Praises Andrews' Ability

Andrews, said Neal, "is endowed with that rare possession known as high executive ability—organizing ability — which the office demands, yes requires."

Neely "may be, and is, qualified for the duties of a senator, for he has spent a life time in the Congress of the United States," said Neal. The duties of a senator call for little or no executive ability or ability for organizing men and things."

Pointing to charges that Neely is a candidate "on demand" of CIO leaders, Neal inquired "what will be his line of defense to their demands, if and when he is elected to the office of governor?"

Campaign Will Be Started for Library Funds

Will Mark Fifth Anniversary of Community Library at Lonaconing

Chamberlain Has Much To Explain To Parliament

His Talk on Loss of Part of Norway Not Entirely Convincing

A bitter brew of Allied defeat in Norway was served up by Prime Minister Chamberlain to Parliament, although he sought to sweeten it a bit by asserting that Franco-British forces had been withdrawn south of Trondheim without loss.

Against the virtual admission that all central and southern Norway had been abandoned to the Nazi foe, Chamberlain set down a record of German naval losses and troop casualties, and a vague hint that important Allied moves in other war theaters were under way although they could not be revealed.

It was on that note that he averted immediate outbreak of a political storm and muzzled his critics. Yet it cannot long save his war leadership from reckoning for the Trondheim Fiasco. Nor can it go very far to bolster the doubtful hold of his French colleague, Premier Reynaud, upon control of French war policy.

Chamberlain's admission that the first significant clash of the eight-month war between Franco-British and German troops resulted in a stinging Allied defeat cannot be obscured by his boast that Allied landing forces about the Andalsnes base were withdrawn to sea without loss "under the nose" of the German air forces. That does not account for possible isolated British or French detachments in the area, nor for Norwegian Allies whom Berlin pictures as left to fight rear guard actions to protect the Allied flight to sea.

Sooner or later the full toll of Franco-British lives lost in the futile gesture to pinch off Trondheim from the south must be told. Sooner or later, and probably sooner, the effect of the Allied retreat on Norwegian morale and upon Sweden must become a new and unfavorable factor for the Allies in Scandinavia.

It is possible that the Trondheim withdrawal might foreshadow another Allied attempt to land farther south on the Norwegian coast. Several wide fjords cut into Norway deeper to the south than the Trondheim fjord.

Will Fight at Narvik

What seems far more likely, however, is that Allied forces withdrawn form south of Trondheim will be set ashore again north of that front. Landed again at Namsos and at Narvik, they could establish a short defensive line across Norway's north coastal pan-handle and grip solidly the Narvik route to Swedish iron mines.

Chamberlain assured parliament that the retreat from Trondheim did not mean that the battle in Norway had become a "sideshop" in the war with Germany. That is the effect of the Allied decision, however, unless a larger and bitter prepared thrust via Sogne or some other southern fjord is contemplated, or unless Sweden is drawn into the struggle by German action.

The British leader attributed Allied defeat in the Trondheim venture primarily to German air superiority in Norway. That admission confronts the Allies with a grave fact. It presumably means that in the first real test between the weapons upon which the two sides rely chiefly for victory, Allied sea power and German air power, air power won.

What does not yet appear, however, is whether that victory was due primarily to a policy decision by Chamberlain's war cabinet which shackled the British navy against any risky action. There have been many hint of violent disagreements in London as to how the battle in Norway should have been fought, and Chamberlain's tactics in parliament delayed in airing of conflicting views.

By and large, however, there can be read into the Chamberlain statement new evidence that the conservatism and caution that have been the hall-mark of his administration still dominate Allied strategy. The Chamberlain regime still looks to British-French economic power to win the war without great loss of life.

On that thesis, sooner or later, Chamberlain must face the issue on the home front as Reynaud must face it in France. Nor can there be much doubt that collapse of the Allied effort to take Trondheim has shaken Allied war leadership. Perhaps it has set the stage for a new deal all around in the high command or at least for a major reshuffling of the British war cabinet.

Kump Hits Back At His Attackers

Hinton, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—Former Governor H. G. Kump tonight termed as "utterly dishonest" any implication that he obstructed insurance legislation which vested control of fire insurance companies in the state auditor.

Kump referred to "a candidate for United States senator as stating that he 'seemed to recall that during the last session of the legislature' I appeared before a committee x x x x as a 'representative of certain insurance interests,' and insinuating that my action was improper."

"I do not think the candidate recalled anything of the sort," declared Kump, who did not refer by name to the candidate.

Judge Harley M. Kilgore of Beckley, one of Kump's opponents for the nomination, said in speeches this week that the former governor appeared in 1939 before a legislative committee on behalf of "insurance interests" that were opposing "needed legislation."

Kump declared he accepted "legal employment, not from the insurance companies, as implied, but, from the insurance agents of the state who believed that the new proposal would injure their business without any resulting benefit to the citizens of the state.

"I appeared before the legislative committee and made a statement" which Kump said is now of record, adding that "the legislature enacted, in substance, the act that I favored. It is an effective insurance law and gives the auditor absolute control of fire insurance companies.

Candy Kitchen Downs Posts In Wild Game

The Candy Kitchen defeated the Post Pirates 17-16 in the only game played in the South End Booster League yesterday as the Davis Gassers forfeited to the Keegan Gassers when a full quota of players did not appear on the Taylor Field

The two teams gathered as many hits as they did runs in the free-hitting fracas and each had eight errors. The Candy Kitchen assault was led by Pannone with a double and single, Heller with two coubles, Snider with a triple and three singles, Mullen with a homer and two singles and Lisanti with a four-bagger.

Cotter's pinch hit homer in the seventh with three on put the Pirates right back in the ball game but Hoyle, on the hill for Candy Kitchen, got the next batter for the final out of the game. H. Dean and Wisegarver had doubles for Posts with Dean also getting a single. W. Dean had a triple for the Pirates.

Kilgore Asks Kump For an Explanation

Williamson, W. Va., May 3. (AP)—Judge Harley M. Kilgore, candidate of the "federal" forces for the Democratic senatorial nomination, asked tonight that former Governor H. G. Kump explain his connection with the "statehouse" faction which is supporting Democratic State R. Carl Andrews for the nomination for governor.

Kump is an aspirant for the nomination for U. S. Senate. Kilgore, running mate of Senator M. M. Neely who is seeking the gubernatorial nomination, said:

"Invariably as I travel throughout the state, employes and executives of the state government are pooling their efforts to secure the nomination of both Kump and Andrews. They are never working for just Andrews or just Kump, but always for both.

"I ask the former governor if he is totally ignorant of all this and if his efforts to publicly confuse the citizens of West Virginia by decrying any connections whatsoever with the Andrews candidacy is not the rankest kind of political subterfuge."

Kilgore, judge of the Raleigh County Criminal Court at Beckley, stated that after the United Mine Workers and coal operators agreed on a wage rate in September, 1932, Kump went to Washington and appealed among government officials for reduction of wages of West Virginia "on the ground that the differential agreed to between the union and the operators of the South and North was too low."

The judge asserted that "this action on the part of Governor Kump was a clean-cut demonstration that he was attempting to interfere with the wage negotiations taking place in the Appalachian conference.

The story of "Buck Benny Rides Again" permits Jack to cavort against a horse-opera background without surrendering any of his radio personality. The picture opens in a broadcasting studio. The New York heat is unbearable, and Benny's sidekicks on the air are trying to sell him the idea of a vacation. Phil Harris wants to go to Nevada, with an eye to meeting a Reno divorcee there. Rochester is getting tired of buying ice cakes for Carmichael, the polar bear.

It's no go, however, until Jack meets Joan Cameron (played by Ellen Drew) and falls in love with her. Joan likes the West, and to make an impression, Jack persuades her that he owns a ranch out there. His deception gets a boost when he learns that Andy Devine actually owns a ranch in Nevada. The whole troupe, including Joan, who is auditioning for Benny, are transported there.

Brian Donlevy Was World War Aviator

Brian Donlevy, featured in Columbia's "Behind Prison Gates" at the Garden theater, was a member of the famous Lafayette Escadrille in the World War. During an aerial "dog-fight," Donlevy was grazed by a flying machine-gun bullet. Almost blinded by the blood which streamed into his eyes, he managed to make a forced landing. When he alighted, he discovered that he had set the plane down in front of a hospital!

Extensive research was made into the slang used by convicts in order to give an authentic flavor to Columbia's "Behind Prison Gates," now at the Garden theater. Brian Donlevy and Jacqueline Wells, featured players, and the other members of the cast all toss off phrases that are currently a part of the argot of all modern penitentiaries.

Typical examples are the use of "crush-out," meaning a jail-break; "big screw," used in referring to the warden; "doing my own time," which means to mind one's own business and "dummy up," the warning when one of the guards is watching.

"Behind Prison Gates" takes place almost entirely within the walls of a large prison. For this reason, Director Charles Barton and Scenarists Arthur T. Horman and Leslie T. White studied prison procedure at length and talked to many ex-convicts in the course of the production. They are confident that the picture is accurate and free from "boners."

Romantic Drama Is Feature at Liberty

Weaving a dramatic romance about a girl from the wrong side of the tracks and her Prince Charming who runs a hamburger stand, "Primrose Path" brings Giger Rogers and Joel McCrea to the New Liberty theater today.

Adapted from the drama, Broadway, the story deals with the stormy romance of Ellie May Adams and Ed Wallace. Ellie May, desperately ashamed of her dissolute family and determined to keep decent herself, meets Ed while digging clams at the beach. She falls instantly in love with him. Her sincerity affects him and they are married and for a few weeks are blissfully happy.

But Ellie May realizes that sooner or later Ed will learn the truth about her family, and decides to bring them together. The meeting breaks up their marriage. Ed, furious at Ellie May's deception and believing she is tarred with the same brush, storms away.

How Ed's subsequent efforts at reconciliation are frustrated by Ellie May's waspish grandmother, the girl's losing battle to support the family after her mother dies, and the manner in which the young couple's troubles are straightened out, make for drama and suspense.

Marjorie Rambeau and Miles Mander appear as Ellie May's easy-going mother and broken-down father respectively; Joan Carroll as her sassy little sister; and Queenie Vassar, famous stage actress making her screen debut, as the malicious grandmother, comprise the Adams family. Henry Travers has the role of McCrea's sympathetic grandfather and Vivienne Osborne and Carmen Morales play other important parts.

Dartmouth pin-spillers, aided by a 3-0 forfeit victory over Army and a 2-1 loss by the league leaders climbed to within three games of first place in the SS. Peter & Paul Mixed League last week.

The defeat of the pace-setting Holy Cross team by Yale on the Saint pinways set the stage for a thrilling finish this week. The Indians are slated to meet the Crusaders in the final match of the second half and a triple win for the Dartmouth team would insure it a tie and necessitate a rolloff for the second half crown.

In last week's other match Notre Dame scored a 2-1 win over Southern California to knot Yale for third place. High scorers were Bob Boden, Yale 431; J. Stewart, Holy Cross 405; "Sis" King, Southern California 364; Mr. Grabenstein Dartmouth 456; and Barney Martz Notre Dame 378. The summaries:

Chamberlain Has Much To Explain To Parliament

His Talk on Loss of Part of Norway Not Entirely Convincing

A bitter brew of Allied defeat in Norway was served up by Prime Minister Chamberlain to Parliament, although he sought to sweeten it a bit by asserting that Franco-British forces had been withdrawn south of Trondheim without loss.

Against the virtual admission that all central and southern Norway had been abandoned to the Nazi foe, Chamberlain set down a record of German naval losses and troop casualties, and a vague hint that important Allied moves in other war theaters were under way although they could not be revealed.

It was on that note that he averted immediate outbreak of a political storm and muzzled his critics. Yet it cannot long save his war leadership from reckoning for the Trondheim Fiasco. Nor can it go very far to bolster the doubtful hold of his French colleague, Premier Reynaud, upon control of French war policy.

Chamberlain's admission that the first significant clash of the eight-month war between Franco-British and German troops resulted in a stinging Allied defeat cannot be obscured by his boast that Allied landing forces about the Andalsnes base were withdrawn to sea without loss "under the nose" of the German air forces. That does not account for possible isolated British or French detachments in the area, nor for Norwegian Allies whom Berlin pictures as left to fight rear guard actions to protect the Allied flight to sea.

Sooner or later the full toll of Franco-British lives lost in the futile gesture to pinch off Trondheim from the south must be told. Sooner or later, and probably sooner, the effect of the Allied retreat on Norwegian morale and upon Sweden must become a new and unfavorable factor for the Allies in Scandinavia.

It is possible that the Trondheim withdrawal might foreshadow another Allied attempt to land farther south on the Norwegian coast. Several wide fjords cut into Norway deeper to the south than the Trondheim fjord.

Will Fight at Narvik

What seems far more likely, however, is that Allied forces withdrawn form south of Trondheim will be set ashore again north of that front. Landed again at Namsos and at Narvik, they could establish a short defensive line across Norway's northern coastal pan-handle and grip solidly the Narvik route to Swedish iron mines.

Chamberlain assured parliament that the retreat from Trondheim did not mean that the battle in Norway had become a "sideshop" in the war with Germany. That is the effect of the Allied decision, however, unless a larger and bitter prepared thrust via Sogne or some other southern fjord is contemplated, or unless Sweden is drawn into the struggle by German action.

The British leader attributed Allied defeat in the Trondheim venture primarily to German air superiority in Norway. That admission confronts the Allies with a grave fact. It presumably means that the first real test between the weapons upon which the two sides rely chiefly for victory, Allied sea power and German air power, air power won.

What does not yet appear, however, is whether that victory was due primarily to a policy decision of Chamberlain's war cabinet which checked the British navy against any risky action. There have been any hint of violent disagreements in London as to how the battle in Norway should have been fought, and Chamberlain's tactics in parliament delayed in airing of conflicting views.

By and large, however, there can be read into the Chamberlain statement new evidence that the conservatism and caution that have been the hall-mark of his administration still dominate Allied strategy. The Chamberlain regime still looks to British-French economic power to win the war without great loss of life.

On that thesis, sooner or later, Chamberlain must face the issue on the home front as Reynaud must face it in France. Nor can there be much doubt that collapse of the Allied effort to take Trondheim has shaken Allied war leadership. Perhaps it has set the stage for a new deal all around in the high command or at least for a major reshuffling of the British war cabinet.

Kump Hits Back At His Attackers

Hinton, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—Former Governor H. G. Kump tonight termed as "utterly dishonest" any implication that he obstructed insurance legislation which vested control of fire insurance companies in the state auditor.

Kump referred to "a candidate for United States senator as stating that he 'seemed to recall that during the last session of the legislature' I appeared before a committee x x x as a 'representative of certain insurance interests,' and insinuating that my action was improper."

"I do not think the candidate recalled anything of the sort," declared Kump, who did not refer by name to the candidate.

Judge Harley M. Kilgore of Beckley, one of Kump's opponents for the nomination, said in speeches this week that the former governor appeared in 1939 before a legislative committee on behalf of "insurance interests" that were opposing "needed legislation."

Kump declared he accepted "legal employment, not from the insurance companies, as implied, but, from the insurance agents of the state who believed that the new proposal would injure their business without any resulting benefit to the citizens of the state.

"I appeared before the legislative committee and made a statement" which Kump said is now of record, adding that "the legislature enacted, in substance, the act that I favored. It is an effective insurance law and gives the auditor absolute control of fire insurance companies.

Candy Kitchen Downs Posts In Wild Game

The Candy Kitchen defeated the Post Pirates 17-16 in the only game played in the South End Booster League yesterday as the Davis Gassers forfeited to the Keegan Gassers when a full quota of players did not appear on the Taylor Field.

The two teams gathered as many hits as they did runs in the free-hitting fracas and each had eight errors. The Candy Kitchen assault was led by Pannone with a double and single, Heller with two coubles, Snider with a triple and three singles, Mullen with a homer and two singles and Lisanti with a four-bagger.

Cotter's pinch hit homer in the seventh with three on put the Pirates right back in the ball game but Hoyle, on the hill for Candy Kitchen, got the next batter for the final out of the game. H. Dean and Wisegarver had doubles for Posts with Dean also getting a single. W. Dean had a triple for the Pirates.

Kilgore Asks Kump For an Explanation

Williamson, W. Va., May 3. (AP)—Judge Harley M. Kilgore, candidate of the "federal" forces for the Democratic senatorial nomination, asked tonight that former Governor H. G. Kump explain his connection with the "statehouse" faction which is supporting Democratic State R. Carl Andrews for the nomination for governor.

Kump is an aspirant for the nomination for U. S. Senate. Kilgore, running mate of Senator M. M. Neely who is seeking the gubernatorial nomination, said:

"Invariably as I travel throughout the state, employes and executives of the state government are pooling their efforts to secure the nomination of both Kump and Andrews. They are never working for just Andrews or just Kump, but always for both.

"I ask the former governor if he is totally ignorant of all this and if his efforts to publicly confuse the citizens of West Virginia by decrying any connections whatsoever with the Andrews candidacy is not the rankest kind of political subterfuge."

Kilgore, judge of the Raleigh County Criminal Court at Beckley, stated that after the United Mine Workers and coal operators agreed on a wage rate in September, 1932, Kump went to Washington and appealed among government officials for reduction of wages of West Virginia "on the ground that the differential agreed to between the union and the operators of the South and North was too low."

The judge asserted that "this action on the part of Governor Kump was a clean-cut demonstration that he was attempting to interfere with the wage negotiations taking place in the Appalachian conference.

Commercial Rolloff Won by Times-News

Times-News pinemen, who won the first half title in the Commercial League by defeating Eller Chevrolet in a rolloff match and who finished in the cellar in the home stretch campaign, now hold the loop's season championship.

In the rolloff this week at the Savoy, the Newsmen defeated Railway Express, last half victors, by 188 sticks in the five-game, total-pin contest.

The championship was the fourth won by the Newsmen in the ten-year history of the league, which will officially close the season tomorrow night at 7 o'clock with the annual banquet at Cottage Inn.

In the rolloff, each team used six men with only the scores of the five highest counting in the total. The Newsmen piled up a commanding lead in the first two games, winning the first by 202 pins and the second by 88.

The Expressmen flashed back to take the third game by 166 and the fourth by ten, but the first half champs copped the fifth tussle by 24 maples. Team totals were 3,903 and 3,715.

Setting the pace for Times-News was Bill Lee with 206-888 or an average of 178 and Leo Leasure with 179-772. Dick Collins topped the Expressmen with 187-822. The summaries:

might call Shuffle Off to Rochester-Buffalo.

The story of "Buck Benny Rides Again" permits Jack to cavort against a horse-opera background without surrendering any of his radio personality. The picture opens in a broadcasting studio. The New York heat is unbearable, and Benny's sidekicks on the air are trying to sell him the idea of a vacation. Phil Harris wants to go to Nevada, with an eye to meeting a Reno divorcee there. Rochester is getting tired of buying ice cakes for Carmichael, the polar bear.

It's no go, however, until Jack meets Joan Cameron (played by Ellen Drew) and falls in love with her. Joan likes the West, and to make an impression, Jack persuades her that he owns a ranch out there. His deception gets a boost when he learns that Andy Devine actually owns a ranch in Nevada. The whole troupe, including Joan, who is auditioning for Benny, are transported there.

Brian Donlevy Was World War Aviator

Brian Donlevy, featured in Columbia's "Behind Prison Gates" at the Garden theater, was a member of the famous Lafayette Escadrille in the World War. During an aerial "dog-fight," Donlevy was grazed by a flying machine-gun bullet. Almost blinded by the blood which streamed into his eyes, he managed to make a forced landing. When he alighted, he discovered that he had set the plane down in front of a hospital!

Extensive research was made into the slang used by convicts in order to give an authentic flavor to Columbia's "Behind Prison Gates," now at the Garden theater. Brian Donlevy and Jacqueline Wells, featured players, and the other members of the cast all toss off phrases that are currently a part of the argot of all modern penitentiaries.

Typical examples are the use of "crush-out," meaning a jail-break; "big screw," used in referring to the warden; "doing my own time," which means to mind one's own business and "dummy up," the warning when one of the guards is watching.

"Behind Prison Gates" takes place almost entirely within the walls of a large prison. For this reason, Director Charles Barton and Scenarists Arthur T. Horman and Leslie T. White studied prison procedure at length and talked to many ex-convicts in the course of the production. They are confident that the picture is accurate and free from "boners."

Romantic Drama Is Feature at Liberty

Weaving a dramatic romance about a girl from the wrong side of the tracks and her Prince Charming who runs a hamburger stand, "Primrose Path" brings Giger Rogers and Joel McCrea to the New Liberty theater today.

Adapted from the drama, Broadway, the story deals with the stormy romance of Ellie May Adams and Ed Wallace. Ellie May, desperately ashamed of her dissolute family and determined to keep decent herself, meets Ed while digging clams at the beach. She falls instantly in love with him. Her sincerity affects him and they are married and for a few weeks are blissfully happy.

But Ellie May realizes that sooner or later Ed will learn the truth about her family, and decides to bring them together. The meeting breaks up their marriage. Ed, furious at Ellie May's deception and believing she is tarred with the same brush, storms away.

How Ed's subsequent efforts at reconciliation are frustrated by Ellie May's waspish grandmother, the girl's losing battle to support the family after her mother dies, and the manner in which the young couple's troubles are straightened out, make for drama and suspense.

Marjorie Rambeau and Miles Mander appear as Ellie May's easy-going mother and broken-down father respectively; Joan Carroll as her sassy little sister; and Queenie Vassar, famous stage actress making her screen debut, as the malicious grandmother, comprise the Adams family. Henry Travers has the role of McCrea's sympathetic grandfather and Vivienne Osborne and Carmen Morales play other important parts.

Dartmouth pin-spillers, aided by a 3-0 forfeit victory over Army and a 2-1 loss by the league leaders climbed to within three games of first place in the SS. Peter & Paul Mixed League last week.

The defeat of the pace-setting Holy Cross team by Yale on the Saint pinways set the stage for a thrilling finish this week. The Indians are slated to meet the Crusaders in the final match of the second half and a triple win for the Dartmouth team would insure it a tie and necessitate a rolloff for the second half crown.

In last week's other match Notre Dame scored a 2-1 win over Southern California to knot Yale for third place. High scorers were Bob Boden, Yale 431; J. Stewart, Holy Cross 405; "Sis" King, Southern California 364; Mr. Grabenstein Dartmouth 456; and Barney Martz Notre Dame 378. The summaries:

Three Sandlot Leagues To Open Tomorrow

Section Circuits Raise Curtains on Season Campaign

Frostburg, Westernport and Midland Scene of Contests

The annual sandlot baseball parade in Allegany county and the Cumberland tri-state district will swing into action tomorrow afternoon with opening games in three leagues.

The setup, practically the same as last season, includes the Bi-State League, which will be launching its fifth annual campaign; Pen-Mar League, which operated a year ago as the Will's Creek Valley, and the Tri-County League, which has stuck to an all Sunday game card since its organization.

Bi-State clubs, with Keyser Moose taking over the Lonaconing franchise for the only change in personnel, begin their 30-game mark with Cumberland meeting Frostburg American Legion at Frostburg, Hyndman invading Midland to meet the Red Sox, and Westvaco playing host to Keyser at Memorial Park, Westernport. All openers are carded for 3 o'clock.

New Crop Of Managers

Keyser is the only new Bi-State member, but quite a few changes have been made in the section's top circuit since last year. Frostburg has a net sponsor setup, the American Legion taking over from the Merchant organization which operated Mountain City clubs in recent years, and the Eagle moguls at Hyndman have been succeeded by the Playground Association.

There has also been a 100 percent turnover in managers with the Midland pilot still to be named. Tommy McGuire, who piloted Red Sox clubs to Bi-State pennants in 1938 and 1939, has transferred to Westvaco, taking with him Louie Porta and other Altoona, Pa., tossers who played with Midland the last two seasons; Joe Carbacio, with Frostburg last year, will skipper Keyser's entry; Enoch Price has come out of retirement to handle Frostburg where Bill Farrady did the master-minding last year; "Sonny" Geatz has succeeded Hubert Radcliffe as boss of the Colts, and Fred Clapper has taken over the Hyndman reins from Garland Green.

Six Clubs In Tri-County

Six teams are in the Tri-County League. They are the Cumberland Old Germans, Paw Paw Boosters, Grantsville, Rainsburg, Pa., Flintstone and Barrelville.

The Old Germans played under the name of Old Exports last season and captured the championship by defeating Keyser's first half champions in the best-of-three-game playoff. Keyser dropped out of the loop this year in order to join the Bi-State.

Paw Paw, Grantsville, Flintstone and Barrelville are holdover outfits while Rainsburg will take Keyser's place. In opening battles, Paw Paw will meet the Old Germans on the latter's field, Grantsville will invade Rainsburg and Flintstone will journey to Barrelville.

Tri-County umpires are Fred Yommer and Jim Denninger, Grantsville; Nick Carter and Virgil Dolly, Flintstone; Perry Rockwell, Paw Paw, and John Briner, Old Germans.

A split season will be played with ten games for each club in each half. Winners of the two races will meet in a post-season series for the title.

Pen-Mar Needs Team

The matter of an eighth club in the Pen-Mar League will be taken up at a meeting tonight at 7 o'clock at the Central Y. M. C. A. Seven teams are ready to fire opening bolts Sunday and Secretary Howard Northcraft has stated he is reasonably certain another club will apply for the vacant franchise tonight when the remainder of the forefeit fees will be posted and the scheduled given a final check.

In curtain-raisers, Centerville, Pa., will play the Cumberland Merchants here, Wellersburg, Pa., will go to Barton, Mt. Savage will be host to Lonaconing and Eckhart will entertain the eighth club if one is found.

In 1939, the loop, then known as the Will's Creek Valley, consisted of six teams—Mt. Savage, Eckhart, Wellersburg, Barton, Salisbury and Cumberland. Garrett began the season but dropped out in the second half and Barton finished the Pennsylvanians' schedule.

Green.

Lonaconing belonged to the Bi-State last summer while Centerville played independent ball. Eckhart's tossers, who copped the first half title with a record of eight straight victories, defeated Mt. Savage in the three-game playoff for the championship.

Pen-Mar umpires who have been approved are Charles Bruner and James Pifer, Eckhart; "Tate" Stevens and John Angellatta, Mt. Savage; Earl Gurmer, Wellersburg; Charles True, Cumberland; Earl Kelley and James Merrbach, Lonaconing, and C. Davis, Barton.

The SPORT TRAIL

By WHITNEY MARTIN

New York, May 3 (AP)—When the cheese starts nibbling at the mouse there are likely to be a few plaintive squeaks, so mild confusion in the New York Yankees ranks under similar circumstances is to be expected.

After all these years of dishing it out the McCarthymen have been forced to answer the question of whether or not they can take it. The answer seems to be yes, but none too gracefully.

The team that won four consecutive world series was a picture of smug confidence. Left-handed or right-handed were all the same to the Bronx Bombers.

It took a flagrant umpiring error to bring the plump figure of McCarthy out of the dugout, and the players themselves accepted adverse decisions placidly. What if it did mean a run for the other team? It was just like waiting for a street car; there'd be another run along for the Yanks in a minute.

The Yanks got off on the wrong foot this year. Joe DiMaggio couldn't even play; the famed batting power was a puny pop; the team, up to today, had won only five games while losing six.

And for the first time the Yanks began to show the spirit of a hungry team, a team battling for survival.

Bill Dickey arguing bitterly with an umpire; Joe McCarthy popping up off the bench twice in a game to dispute a decision, when in recent years twice was about par for the season for him; the team bunting, yes bunting, five times in one game—all these contribute to the vivid picture of a ball club on edge, battling its own nerves as well as the opposition.

Left-handers have been the bane of the club's existance to date, and McCarthy doesn't intend that the situation shall continue. Maybe that's the reason they are champions.

The one bright spot in the team's play to date has been the pitching. The Yankee moundsmen have allowed an average of only 3.18 runs and 6.82 hits for each nine innings in 11 games.

With that kind of pitching the Yanks could win their share even if their hitting was confined to bunts and infield singles, but it won't be. They are still very much the team to beat.

Local Boys Vie in College Park Meet

Allegany High and Fort Hill High athletes will attempt to capture top honors for Cumberland in the annual University of Maryland track and field meet at College Park.

Both local schools will compete in all the eight events closed to the counties while one Alleganian and possibly one member of the Sentinel squad will vie in open scholastic contests.

Allegany's representatives will be Jim Gaffney, Paul Durst, Tommy Rudd, Bill James, Vernon Miller, Joe Gulbronson, Bill Richards and Bill Hersh.

Gaffney, in addition to running the 100, will be on the Campobello half-mile relay team in the closed county events. He will also compete in the county and open shot put contests and open javelin throw, which he won a year ago.

Fort Hill's aggregation will include Bill Davis, Harold Hipsley, Eddie Spear, Billy Dean, Stanley Morris, Gene Hook and probably Clarence Minnicks. Minnicks has been entered in the open pole vault but hasn't been doing so well lately and may not make the trip.

Morgantown High Strong Favorite To Win Meet Today

Parkersburg, Huntington Teams Should Make Contention

Charlestown, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—If the mathematics are correct, the sectional track and field meets tomorrow should make Morgantown a strong favorite for the state competition a week hence, with Parkersburg and Huntington thrown in to make it a tussle.

Some of the boys got together in Charleston with the statistics on recent meets over the state, and that is the result of their deductions.

There are plenty of other teams which are concededly contenders, among them Triadelphia of Wheeling, Charleston, Beckley, Oak Hill, Washington Irving of Clarksburg and Elkins.

The picture will be clearer tomorrow after the sectionals at Wheeling, Clarksburg, Martinsburg, Elkins, Charleston, Oak Hill and Bluefield.

Captured "Big Ten" Title

Not a little of the estimate on Morgantown's strength is based upon the fact that Coach Arthur Clyde's outfit captured the Big Ten meet by a wide margin. Added to that is the general opinion that his team is well-balanced.

Huntington, defending champion for this year's state meet at Morgantown, will be minus "Bullet Bob" Wright, whose feats in the dashes and hurdles spotted the Pony Express 20 points for two consecutive years.

This year Huntington will depend to a great extent on its fine relay teams, which have dominated every meet the Express has entered.

Parkersburg's strength lies in the track events, but it is noticeably weak in the field, while the opposite is true at Charleston.

Triadelphia of Wheeling, although beaten by Parkersburg in a triangular meet with Marietta, also may have a word to say about the championships.

The Triads came in second last year when Huntington tallied 53 3-7 points to 43 3-7 for Triadelphia and 34 3-7 for Beckley, the third place winners.

Should Morgantown come through for the title this year, it will bring a new name into the winner's circles, so long dominated by Huntington, Charleston and Parkersburg.

Charleston has won eight of the 22 meets held while Huntington has captured seven, Parkersburg 4, Oak Hill 2 and Pennsboro 1. Huntington leads in all-time scoring, however, with 811 points, Charleston runs second with 709, Parkersburg had 686, Triadelphia of Wheeling 352, Oak Hill 219 and Pennsboro 262.

Several innovations will mark this year's competitions.

It will be the first time that a meet ever has been held at Oak Hill, for previously there were but six sectionals.

The javelin throw has gone the way of the hammer throw as an event too dangerous and too expensive while a regulation high school discus has been substituted for the college discus heretofore used.

As in other years, only first-place winners at Martinsburg, Bluefield and Elkins will be qualified for the trip to Morgantown while both winners and runners-up will qualify in the other four meets at Wheeling, Clarksburg, Charleston and Oak Hill.

Popping the pins for 200, 180 and 197 scores, Elizabeth Rhoe established a new Club Ladies' League record of 577 at the Club this week as the Diamonds closed the second half race with a 3-0 victory over the Spades. The Clubs copped two of three games from the Hearts in the other closing clash, but pulled up seven games in back of the Diamonds in the final standing.

Mrs. Rhoe's new set mark replaces the 550 record she posted last week when she also tied the game mark of 220, held jointly with Gladys Brodbeck and Nell Nichols. Her brilliant work enabled the Diamonds to capture game and set scoring honors for the week.

The Hearts and Spades will meet Friday night in a rolloff match for the 1939-40 championship, the Spades having taken the first half title with a record of 30 victories and 15 defeats. The Clubs finished the opening dash in the cellar with 17 victories and 28 defeats. This week's summaries:

Posedel Hurls And Bats Bees To Second Win

Veteran Pitcher Holds Cards to Seven Hits in Winning, 4-2

St. Louis, May 3 (AP)—Bill Posedel's hurling and hitting gave Boston's Bees their second victory of the year today, a 4 to 2 triumph over St. Louis' faltering Cardinals.

The veteran highthander not only held the Cards to seven scattered hits, but his double in the sixth inning started the Bees on a three-run rally, the clincher of the game.

For a time it looked like Lon Warneke would be the first Cardinal to go the route this season, but five hits off him in that fatal sixth meant curtains.

Most of the thrills of the contest were packed in that sixth inning. Three of the Bees stole bases, Buddy Hassett scored on Tony Cuccinello, reached second on a double steal, and Les Scarsella later pilfered second.

In addition to Posedel's double, Hassett, Cuccinello, Chester Ross and Scarsella singled to send Warneke to the showers.

Posedel also accounted for the Bees' other run in the ninth. After drawing a base on balls, he went to second on a passed ball and scored on a single. The boxscore:

KENTUCKY'S DAY

Louisville, Ky.—This is Kentucky's day—possibly Kentucky's biggest day in Kentucky's favorite sport. And I don't even mean the absorption of mint juleps. I don't even mean the winning of another Kentucky Derby.

Kentuckians today, in this crowded, swirling bluegrass metropolis, believe they have the horse which will pick up where Man o' War left off — a thoroughbred which will move on beyond Man o' War's glory and Seabiscuit's gold.

The name, as you must know, is Colonel Edward R. Bradley's Bimelech, which with eight straight victories under his belt and the main highway on beyond.

To Kentucky, Bimelech is already leading the pack in the Derby, the Preakness, the Belmont and the remainder of the summer menu. He is the horse not only of 1940, but possibly of all the years racing has known. At least, that's Kentucky's May-day dream.

This, of course, is a terrific order. It may happen. But it must happen in a game that is always loaded to the gunwale with chance, which in a large measure means track conditions, racing luck and the horse's ability to duck equine ills that are thicker than stars in a summer sky.

The Day of the Race

All Derby crowds are just about the same. They come from everywhere by every form of conveyance known—plane and train, motor and on foot. How a lot of them get back home is another matter. There are many spots where all the blocking backs in the country couldn't advance Tom Harmon or Bronko Nagurski 14 inches in three spearhead assaults.

In this 66th running it will take keen, young eyes to see the price laid on Bimelech. Unless there is a slashing downpour he may be 1 to 3 or 2 to 5. Johnstown looked short enough at 3 to 5.

This may cut down the size of the mutuel collection for the big race. There is no great thrill in betting on a 2-5 shot, and no great urge to bet against such a favorite. Even place bettors will reap no financial harvest unless some outsider cuts into the scenery.

The price shoppers will have a gloomy afternoon when the Derby arrives.

Piling Up the Years

A few days ago we spoke of Lonnie Stagg and Connie Mack at 77 still on the job. They pile up the years even higher in Kentucky.

Colonel Matt Winn, the presiding figure, saw Aristides win the first Kentucky Derby back in 1875. He will be looking at his 66th Derby show.

Colonel Edward Bradley, at the age of 80, expects to have his fifth Derby winner.

These two have seen a flock of horses run many a mile. They have been peering into the sunset for a long time. But they are still a big part of this annual round-up. A Kentucky Derby minus Winn and Bradley would be a different sort of Derby. Whatever happens, at least these two have known their full share of racing thrills.

The Battle for Second Place

This is supposed to be a battle for second place. Here the three names mentioned are Mioland, Pictor and Dit, sometimes scrambled in a different order. Also the name of Gallahadion slips in.

But if any horse is to collar Bimelech it should be Mioland or Pictor. You may recall the fact that War Admiral was 1-4 when he ran against Seabiscuit. Bimelech may be much better than War Admiral. Certainly Mioland and Pictor haven't proved they are Seabiscuits.

But those trying to wiggle away from the Derby favorite's short price are pulling every argument ever known out of the old hat on their last-minute shopping tour.

The only sane idea at a race track is to win money—if you can. So "Bimelech to show" will be another popular theme. When a winning price dips that far down the difference is too small to take on the gamble.

Turning Loose

There is a general feeling here of "turning loose" more than ever before. You can sense the feeling in the crowds that no one seems to know what the future holds—not even the next few weeks.

"Eat, drink and be merry—for tomorrow—" That word "tomorrow" cuts in deeper now than I have ever seen it hit a tremendous sporting crowd.

They seem to think in terms offered by old Omar Khayyam—

"Ah, my Beloved, fill the Cup that clears
To-day of past Regret and future Fears:
To-morrow!—Why, To-morrow I may be
Myself with Yesterday's Seven thousand Years."

In the meanwhile, the wandering throngs from all over the country, high and low and lowest, are waiting for the band to play "My Old Kentucky Home" and get their two-minute thrill as the call comes again—"They're off."

Commercial League Ends Tenth Season

One of the oldest duckpin circuits in Western Maryland, the Cumberland Commercial League, closed its tenth season Thursday with a chicken banquet at Minke's Cottage Inn.

All of the more than 30 bowlers present were so pleased with the administration of the league's affairs by President Leo E. Leasure and Secretary-Treasurer Frank Hausman that the two officers were re-elected for another year by acclamation.

Secretary Hausman, in presenting unique trophies to the Time-News champions and Railway Express runnerup outfit, stressed that the league always operates on a cooperative basis with each bowler gaining an equal share of the "kitty" at the end of the season.

Short talks were made by President Leasure, a member of the championship team; Willis Robertson, Railway Express; Sam DeLuca and Leonard Rising who bagged high average and high game honors, respectively; Eddie Yates and Frantz Carl, Times-News; Harry Smith, Eiler Chevrolet; Elmer Welsh, Rosenbaums; Ted Hausman, United Accessories; Marshall Deremer, Nelson Neon, Joseph Stitcher, Richard Collins, Gene Gunning, "Sparky" Chisholm and Elwood Foltz.

Nearly all of the speakers voiced the enjoyment received from fellowship during the season and expressed the hope that their well-balanced league would operate with largely the same personnel next year.

Yankees Come to Life To Defeat White Sox, 8-4

Club Two Hurlers for Nine Blows, Including Trio of Four-Baggers

New York, May 3 (AP) — The Yankees came to life with a vengeance today clubbing blond Edgar Smith and Clint Brown for nine hits — including homers by Red Rolfe, George Selkirk and Charlie Keller — to win the first of a two-game series with the Chicago White Sox by 8-4.

The victory gave young Marvin Breuer, up from their Kansas City farm, his first major league victory of the season. He kept 10 Sox hits well scattered until the ninth when Joe Kuhel homered with two on.

Smith lasted for seven innings before retiring in favor of Brown. The boxscore:

Maryland U. 23rd Annual Field Day Scheduled Today

Schoolboys Share Spotlight with Varsity Performers

College Park, Md., May 3, (AP) Schoolboy athletes will share attention with varsity performers tomorrow at the University of Maryland's 23rd annual field day.

While the prep and high school boys do their stuff, the university will trot out its varsity ten track and baseball teams to show how the old college try is done.

A feature of the Maryland-Virginia track meet—to be run currently with the interscholastic meet—will be the appearance of Terps' "iron man" relay team which recently took down three championships in the Penn relays.

There will be thirteen open events for the schoolboy trackmen, seven county high events and two Maryland high school relays. Schools from Virginia, the District of Columbia and Pennsylvania are expected to compete with the Marylanders.

Varsity Events

1 p. m.—Maryland vs. George Washington, tennis.

1:30 p. m.—Maryland vs. Virginia, track (concurrently with interscholastic meet).

3:30 p. m.—Maryland vs. William and Mary, baseball.

The Maryland Frosh-Tech tennis match at 10 a. m., will be the first event on the packed program.

In the varsity track meet, Maryland will show off its great relay runners—Jim Kehoe, Mason Chalister, Alan Miller, Tommy Fee, Gene Ochsendeiter and Bob Dondon—who teamed to make a mile of the Penn relays.

Frank Fuller, star hurdler, will lead the Virginia team into action.

Washington and Lee high, Ballston, Va., will defend its title and Bel Air high will be to defend its county team crown.

Three Sandlot Leagues To Open Tomorrow

Frostburg, Westernport and Midland Scene of Contests

The annual sandlot baseball parade in Allegany county and the Cumberland tri-state district will swing into action tomorrow afternoon with opening games in three leagues.

The setup, practically the same as last season, includes the Bi-State League, which will be launching its fifth annual campaign; Pen-Mar League, which operated a year ago as the Will's Creek Valley, and the Tri-County League, which has stuck to an all Sunday game card since its organization.

Bi-State clubs, with Keyser Moose taking over the Lonaconing franchise for the only change in personnel, begin their 30-game mark with Cumberland meeting Frostburg American Legion at Frostburg. Hyndman invading Midland to meet the Red Sox, and Westvaco playing host to Keyser at Memorial Park, Westernport. All openers are carded for 3 o'clock.

New Crop Of Managers

Keyser is the only new Bi-State member, but quite a few changes have been made in the section's top circuit since last year. Frostburg has a net sponsor setup, the American Legion taking over from the Merchant organization which operated Mountain City clubs in recent years, and the Eagle moguls at Hyndman have been succeeded by the Playground Association.

There has also been a 100 percent turnover in managers with the Midland pilot still to be named. Tommy McGuire, who piloted Red Sox clubs to Bi-State pennants in 1938 and 1939, has transferred to Westvaco, taking with him Louie Porta and other Altoona, Pa., tossers who played with Midland the last two seasons; Joe Carbacio, with Frostburg last year, will skipper Keyser's entry; Enoch Price has come out of retirement to handle Frostburg where Bill Farrady did the master-minding last year; "Sonny" Geatz has succeeded Hubert Radcliffe as boss of the Colts, and Fred Clapper has taken over the Hyndman reins from Garland.

Six Clubs In Tri-County

Six teams are in the Tri-County League. They are the Cumberland Old Germans, Paw Paw Boosters, Grantsville, Rainsburg, Pa., Flintstone and Barrelville.

The Old Germans played under the name of Old Exports last season and captured the championship by defeating Keyser's first half champions in the best-of-three-game playoff. Keyser dropped out of the loop this year in order to join the Bi-State.

Paw Paw, Grantsville, Flintstone and Barrelville are holdover outfits while Rainsburg will take Keyser's place. In opening battles, Paw Paw will meet the Old Germans on the latter's field, Grantsville will invade Rainsburg and Flintstone will journey to Barrelville.

Tri-County umpires are Fred Yommer and Jim Denninger, Grantsville; Nick Carter and Virgil Dolly, Flintstone; Perry Rockwell, Paw Paw, and John Briner, Old Germans.

A split season will be played with ten games for each club in each half. Winners of the two races will meet in a post-season series for the title.

Pen-Mar Needs Team

The matter of an eighth club in the Pen-Mar League will be taken up at a meeting tonight at 7 o'clock at the Central Y. M. C. A. Seven teams are ready to fire opening bolts Sunday and Secretary Howard Northcraft has stated he is reasonably certain another club will apply for the vacant franchise tonight when the remainder of the forefeit fees will be posted and the scheduled given a final check.

In curtain-raisers, Centerville, Pa., will play the Cumberland Merchants here, Wellersburg, Pa., will go to Barton, Mt. Savage will be host to Lonaconing and Eckhart will entertain the eighth club if one is found.

In 1939, the loop, then known as the Will's Creek Valley, consisted of six teams—Mt. Savage, Eckhart, Wellersburg, Barton, Salisbury and Cumberland. Garrett began the season but dropped out in the second half and Barton finished the Pennsylvanians' schedule.

Green.

Lonaconing belonged to the Bi-State last summer while Centerville played independent ball. Eckhart's tossers, who copped the first half title with a record of eight straight victories, defeated Mt. Savage in the three-game playoff for the championship.

Pen-Mar umpires who have been approved are Charles Bruner and James Pifer, Eckhart; "Tate" Stevens and John Angellatta, Mt. Savage; Earl Gurmer, Wellersburg; Charles True, Cumberland; Earl Kelley and James Merrbach, Lonaconing, and C. Davis, Barton.

The SPORT TRAIL

By WHITNEY MARTIN

New York, May 3 (AP)—When the cheese starts nibbling at the mouse there are likely to be a few plaintive squeaks, so mild confusion in the New York Yankees ranks under similar circumstances is to be expected.

After all these years of dishing it out the McCarthymen have been forced to answer the question of whether or not they can take it. The answer seems to be yes, but none too gracefully.

The team that won four consecutive world series was a picture of smug confidence. Left-handed or right-handed were all the same to the Bronx Bombers.

It took a flagrant umpiring error to bring the plump figure of McCarthy out of the dugout, and the players themselves accepted adverse decisions placidly. What if it did mean a run for the other team? It was just like waiting for a street car; there'd be another run along for the Yanks in a minute.

The Yanks got off on the wrong foot this year. Joe DiMaggio couldn't even play; the famed batting power was a puny pop; the team, up to today, had won only five games while losing six.

And for the first time the Yanks began to show the spirit of a hungry team, a team battling for survival.

Bill Dickey arguing bitterly with an umpire; Joe McCarthy popping up off the bench twice in a game to dispute a decision, when in recent years twice was about par for the season for him; the team bunting, yes bunting, five times in one game—all these contribute to the vivid picture of a ball club on edge, battling its own nerves as well as the opposition.

Left-handers have been the bane of the club's existance to date, and McCarthy doesn't intend that the situation shall continue. Maybe that's the reason they are champions.

The one bright spot in the team's play to date has been the pitching. The Yankee moundsmen have allowed an average of only 3.18 runs and 6.82 hits for each nine innings in 11 games.

With that kind of pitching the Yanks could win their share even if their hitting was confined to bunts and infield singles, but it won't be. They are still very much the team to beat.

Local Boys Vie in College Park Meet

Allegany High and Fort Hill High athletes will attempt to capture top honors for Cumberland in the annual University of Maryland track and field meet at College Park.

Both local schools will compete in all the eight events closed to the counties while one Alleganian and possibly one member of the Sentinel squad will vie in open scholastic contests.

Allegany's representatives will be Jim Gaffney, Paul Durst, Tommy Rudd, Bill James, Vernon Miller, Joe Gulbronson, Bill Richards and Bill Hersh.

Gaffney, in addition to running the 100, will be on the Campobello half-mile relay team in the closed county events. He will also compete in the county and open shot put contests and open javelin throw, which he won a year ago.

Fort Hill's aggregation will include Bill Davis, Harold Hipsley, Eddie Spear, Billy Dean, Stanley Morris, Gene Hook and probably Clarence Minnicks. Minnicks has been entered in the open pole vault but hasn't been doing so well lately and may not make the trip.

Morgantown High Strong Favorite To Win Meet Today

Parkersburg, Huntington Teams Should Make Contention

Charlestown, W. Va., May 3 (AP)—If the mathematics are correct, the sectional track and field meets tomorrow should make Morgantown a strong favorite for the state competition a week hence, with Parkersburg and Huntington thrown in to make it a tussle.

Some of the boys got together in Charleston with the statistics on recent meets over the state, and that is the result of their deductions.

There are plenty of other teams which are concededly contenders, among them Triadelphia of Wheeling, Charleston, Beckley, Oak Hill, Washington Irving of Clarksburg and Elkins.

The picture will be clearer tomorrow after the sectionals at Wheeling, Clarksburg, Martinsburg, Elkins, Charleston, Oak Hill and Bluefield.

Captured "Big Ten" Title

Not a little of the estimate on Morgantown's strength is based upon the fact that Coach Arthur Clyde's outfit captured the Big Ten meet by a wide margin. Added to that is the general opinion that his team is well-balanced.

Huntington, defending champion for this year's state meet at Morgantown, will be minus "Bullet Bob" Wright, whose feats in the dashes and hurdles spotted the Pony Express 20 points for two consecutive years.

This year Huntington will depend to a great extent on its fine relay teams, which have dominated every meet the Express has entered.

Parkersburg's strength lies in the track events, but it is noticeably weak in the field, while the opposite is true at Charleston.

Triadelphia of Wheeling, although beaten by Parkersburg in a triangular meet with Marietta, also may have a word to say about the championships.

The Triads came in second last year when Huntington tallied 53 3-7 points to 43 3-7 for Triadelphia and 34 3-7 for Beckley, the third place winners.

Should Morgantown come through for the title this year, it will bring a new name into the winner's circles, so long dominated by Huntington, Charleston and Parkersburg.

Charleston has won eight of the 22 meets held while Huntington has captured seven, Parkersburg 4, Oak Hill 2 and Pennsboro 1. Huntington leads in all-time scoring, however, with 811 points, Charleston runs second with 709, Parkersburg had 686, Triadelphia of Wheeling 352, Oak Hill 219 and Pennsboro 262.

Several innovations will mark this year's competitions.

It will be the first time that a meet ever has been held at Oak Hill, for previously there were but six sectionals.

The javelin throw has gone the way of the hammer throw as an event too dangerous and too expensive while a regulation high school discus has been substituted for the college discus heretofore used.

As in other years, only first-place winners at Martinsburg, Bluefield and Elkins will be qualified for the trip to Morgantown while both winners and runners-up will qualify in the other four meets at Wheeling, Clarksburg, Charleston and Oak Hill.

Popping the pins for 200, 180 and 197 scores, Elizabeth Rhoe established a new Club Ladies' League record of 577 at the Club this week as the Diamonds closed the second half race with a 3-0 victory over the Spades. The Clubs copped two of three games from the Hearts in the other closing clash, but pulled up seven games in back of the Diamonds in the final standing.

Mrs. Rhoe's new set mark replaces the 550 record she posted last week when she also tied the game mark of 220, held jointly with Gladys Brodbeck and Nell Nichols. Her brilliant work enabled the Diamonds to capture game and set scoring honors for the week.

The Hearts and Spades will meet Friday night in a rolloff match for the 1939-40 championship, the Spades having taken the first half title with a record of 30 victories and 15 defeats. The Clubs finished the opening dash in the cellar with 17 victories and 28 defeats. This week's summaries:

Posedel Hurls And Bats Bees To Second Win

Veteran Pitcher Holds Cards to Seven Hits in Winning, 4-2

St. Louis, May 3 (AP)—Bill Posedel's hurling and hitting gave Boston's Bees their second victory of the year today, a 4 to 2 triumph over St. Louis' faltering Cardinals.

The veteran highthander not only held the Cards to seven scattered hits, but his double in the sixth inning started the Bees on a three-run rally, the clincher of the game.

For a time it looked like Lon Warneke would be the first Cardinal to go the route this season, but five hits off him in that fatal sixth meant curtains.

Most of the thrills of the contest were packed in that sixth inning. Three of the Bees stole bases. Buddy Hassett scored on Tony Cuccinello, reached second on a double steal, and Les Scarsella later pilfered second.

In addition to Posedel's double, Hassett, Cuccinello, Chester Ross and Scarsella singled to send Warneke to the showers.

Posedel also accounted for the Bees' other run in the ninth. After drawing a base on balls, he went to second on a passed ball and scored on a single. The boxscore:

KENTUCKY'S DAY

Louisville, Ky.—This is Kentucky's day—possibly Kentucky's biggest day in Kentucky's favorite sport. And I don't even mean the absorption of mint juleps. I don't even mean the winning of another Kentucky Derby.

Kentuckians today, in this crowded, swirling bluegrass metropolis, believe they have the horse which will pick up where Man o' War left off — a thoroughbred which will move on beyond Man o' War's glory and Seabiscuit's gold.

The name, as you must know, is Colonel Edward R. Bradley's Bimelech, which with eight straight victories under his belt and the main highway on beyond.

To Kentucky, Bimelech is already leading the pack in the Derby, the Preakness, the Belmont and the remainder of the summer menu. He is the horse not only of 1940, but possibly of all the years racing has known. At least, that's Kentucky's May-day dream.

This, of course, is a terrific order. It may happen. But it must happen in a game that is always loaded to the gunwale with chance, which in a large measure means track conditions, racing luck and the horse's ability to duck equine ills that are thicker than stars in a summer sky.

The Day of the Race

All Derby crowds are just about the same. They come from everywhere by every form of conveyance known—plane and train, motor and on foot. How a lot of them get back home is another matter. There are many spots where all the blocking backs in the country couldn't advance Tom Harmon or Bronko Nagurski 14 inches in three spearhead assaults.

In this 66th running it will take keen, young eyes to see the price laid on Bimelech. Unless there is a slashing downpour he may be 1 to 3 or 2 to 5. Johnstown looked short enough at 3 to 5.

This may cut down the size of the mutuel collection for the big race. There is no great thrill in betting on a 2-5 shot, and no great urge to bet against such a favorite. Even place bettors will reap no financial harvest unless some outsider cuts into the scenery.

The price shoppers will have a gloomy afternoon when the Derby arrives.

Piling Up the Years

A few days ago we spoke of Lonnie Stagg and Connie Mack at 77 still on the job. They pile up the years even higher in Kentucky.

Colonel Matt Winn, the presiding figure, saw Aristides win the first Kentucky Derby back in 1875. He will be looking at his 66th Derby show.

Colonel Edward Bradley, at the age of 80, expects to have his fifth Derby winner.

These two have seen a flock of horses run many a mile. They have been peering into the sunset for a long time. But they are still a big part of this annual round-up. A Kentucky Derby minus Winn and Bradley would be a different sort of Derby. Whatever happens, at least these two have known their full share of racing thrills.

The Battle for Second Place

This is supposed to be a battle for second place. Here the three names mentioned are Mioland, Pictor and Dit, sometimes scrambled in a different order. Also the name of Gallahadion slips in.

But if any horse is to collar Bimelech it should be Mioland or Pictor. You may recall the fact that War Admiral was 1-4 when he ran against Seabiscuit. Bimelech may be much better than War Admiral. Certainly Mioland and Pictor haven't proved they are Seabiscuits.

But those trying to wiggle away from the Derby favorite's short price are pulling every argument ever known out of the old hat on their last-minute shopping tour.

The only sane idea at a race track is to win money—if you can. So "Bimelech to show" will be another popular theme. When a winning price dips that far down the difference is too small to take on the gamble.

Turning Loose

There is a general feeling here of "turning loose" more than ever before. You can sense the feeling in the crowds that no one seems to know what the future holds—not even the next few weeks.

"Eat, drink and be merry—for tomorrow—" That word "tomorrow" cuts in deeper now than I have ever seen it hit a tremendous sporting crowd.

They seem to think in terms offered by old Omar Khayyam—

"Ah, my Beloved, fill the Cup that clears
To-day of past Regret and future Fears:
To-morrow!—Why, To-morrow I may be
Myself with Yesterday's Seven thousand Years."

In the meanwhile, the wandering throngs from all over the country, high and low and lowest, are waiting for the band to play "My Old Kentucky Home" and get their two-minute thrill as the call comes again—"They're off."

Commercial League Ends Tenth Season

One of the oldest duckpin circuits in Western Maryland, the Cumberland Commercial League, closed its tenth season Thursday with a chicken banquet at Minke's Cottage Inn.

All of the more than 30 bowlers present were so pleased with the administration of the league's affairs by President Leo E. Leasure and Secretary-Treasurer Frank Hausman that the two officers were re-elected for another year by acclamation.

Secretary Hausman, in presenting unique trophies to the Time-News champions and Railway Express runnerup outfit, stressed that the league always operates on a co-operative basis with each bowler gaining an equal share of the "kitty" at the end of the season.

Short talks were made by President Leasure, a member of the championship team; Willis Robertson, Railway Express; Sam DeLuca and Leonard Rising who bagged high average and high game honors, respectively; Eddie Yates and Frantz Carl, Times-News; Harry Smith, Eiler Chevrolet; Elmer Welsh, Rosenbaums; Ted Hausman, United Accessories; Marshall Deremer, Nelson Neon, Joseph Stitcher, Richard Collins, Gene Gunning, "Sparky" Chisholm and Elwood Foltz.

Nearly all of the speakers voiced the enjoyment received from fellowship during the season and expressed the hope that their well-balanced league would operate with largely the same personnel next year.

Yankees Come to Life To Defeat White Sox, 8-4

Club Two Hurlers for Nine Blows, Including Trio of Four-Baggers

New York, May 3 (AP) — The Yankees came to life with a vengeance today clubbing blond Edgar Smith and Clint Brown for nine hits — including homers by Red Rolfe, George Selkirk and Charlie Keller — to win the first of a two-game series with the Chicago White Sox by 8-4.

The victory gave young Marvin Breuer, up from their Kansas City farm, his first major league victory of the season. He kept 10 Sox hits well scattered until the ninth when Joe Kuhel homered with two on.

Smith lasted for seven innings before retiring in favor of Brown. The boxscore:

Maryland U. 23rd Annual Field Day Scheduled Today

Schoolboys Share Spotlight with Varsity Performers

College Park, Md., May 3. (AP)—Schoolboy athletes will share attention with varsity performers tomorrow at the University of Maryland's 23rd annual field day.

While the prep and high school boys do their stuff, the university will trot out its varsity team in track and baseball teams to show how the old college try is done.

A feature of the Maryland-Virginia track meet—to be run currently with the interscholastic meet—will be the appearance of the Terps' "iron man" relay team which recently took down three championships in the Penn relays.

There will be thirteen open events for the schoolboy trackmen, seven county high events and two Maryland high school relays. Schools from Virginia, the District of Columbia and Pennsylvania are expected to compete with the Marylanders.

Varsity Events

1 p. m.—Maryland vs. George Washington, tennis.

1:30 p. m.—Maryland vs. Virginia, track (concurrently with interscholastic meet).

3:30 p. m.—Maryland vs. William and Mary, baseball.

The Maryland Frosh-Tech high tennis match at 10 a. m., will be the first event on the packed program.

In the varsity track meet, Maryland will show off its great relay runners—Jim Kehoe, Mason Chamister, Alan Miller, Tommy Fox, Gene Ochsendeiter and Bob Dondon—who teamed to make a name of the Penn relays.

Frank Fuller, star hurdler, will lead the Virginia team into action.

Washington and Lee high, Ballston, Va., will defend its title and Bel Air high will be out to defend its county team crown.

Louisville All Agog On Eve of Derby Race

By JOHN LARDNER
Released by North American Newspaper Alliance

Louisville, Ky., May 3.—All Louisville and all the Kentucky Derby crowd is agog with doubt and speculation. This is the widest open Derby in years—for second, third, and fourth money.

Every horse in the race, except pointing for the second, third, and for something called Bimelech, is fourth prizes, which are pretty luxurious in themselves, and more than enough to defray the expense of shipping the animal to Churchill Downs to taste the kind of dust that Bimmy kicks up—said to be a dust of peculiarly rich and novel flavor, along the lines of vanilla.

Who is going to get the closest look at Bimelech's stern? That is the question which will continue to grip Louisville until Tuesday morning, when the second horse is expected to finish.

I am a very conscientious reporter, and would like to assure both members of my public that I will stick around the track till Wednesday fortnight, if necesary, to obtain the complete results of the race, such as place, show, etc., and etc.

Pictor and Mioland Must Hustle

By that time, racing experts estimate that Bimelech will have won the Preakness and been matched with Joe Louis for September. Life moves swiftly in this civilization, and if Dit, Pictor, and Mioland do not hustle, they won't be home in time to vote for Thomas E. Dewey.

Last year Johnstown took this race by the biggest margin in its history. He was eating dinner in his quarters, and looking over the box-score of the Red Sox game, when word reached him that Challedon had just flashed under the wire and that Heather Broom was coming like a cyclone.

Veracity compels me to report that Big John did not even take his coffee cup from his lips. He seems to have anticipated that the rest of the field would be home sooner or later.

Now, Challedon was a standout horse in section 2 (stops to take on sleepers at Cincinnati) of last year's Derby. He went on to become the standout horse of the year, when Johnstown began to whistle "Yankee Doodle" involuntarily.

Section 2 of this year's race does not seem to have a standout, as far as the crowd can discover. Mioland, Pictor, Dit, and Gallahadion are thought to possess a good chance of keeping Bimelech in view (through powerful glasses), but which of them is the best of the next best?

Never one to sidestep a knotty problem, I believe that Dit will finish second on a dry track and Pictor if the strip is damp. Some of the boys seem to feel, on the strength of his run in the Chesapeake at Havre De Grace, that Pictor, the W. L. Brann horse from the stable of Challedon, is strictly a mudder, and that Mioland, Gallahadion, and others will lope past him on a fast track.

Pride of the West Coast

The fact is, though, that Pictor can run pretty fast in any kind of footing. He won his debut of the year at Bowie in the sunshine, and won it by eight lengths in six furlongs, which means that he did not loiter. My hunch is that Pictor not only will cop third money regardless of the going, but will make Dit hustle for the place. And Dit is a real good horse.

Mioland is the pride of the west coast, whose gamblers—their name is Legion, or McLegion, or O'Legion, or something of the sort—bombarded the future books with bets and drove his price down to 4 to 1. I have an idea it will be better than that at the track, but maybe not. A lot of people like him.

In a race for 3-year-olds this early in the year, your inclination is to back the sharpest horses, the ones that have run, and run well, most recently. Bimelech, Pictor, and Dit are all recent winners of good races. Mioland has not been in competition since his winter campaign. Momentum is important (not always, but usually) in the Derby, and if Mioland has lost his momentum, he doesn't figure in the money.

On the other hand, the horse belongs to a very fortunate fellow, Charles S. "Lucky" Howard, and the Howard stable is hot. Its members include Seabiscuit and Kayak II, one-two in the last Santa Anita handicap. You are bucking destiny to some extent when you bet Mioland to finish out of the dough.

However, that is the way I am betting—Dit and Pictor (or Pictor and Dit) and Mioland. That's section 2—No observation car, drops mail at Toledo.

Bosox Take Lead In Junior Loop With 9 to 8 Win

Slugging of Jim Tabor Enables Boston To Defeat Browns

Boston, May 3 (AP)—The slugging of Jim Tabor gave the Red Sox a 9-8 victory over St. Louis in ten innings today and a lift over the idle Cleveland Indians into the American League's top rung.

Tabor's second homer tied the score in the ninth and his single with the bases loaded in the tenth brought in Ted Williams with the winning run.

Manager Joe Cronin and Williams also bashed out homers and Walter Judnich put the Browns in the ball game in the seventh by blasting out his fourth circuit drive of the season with two on base.

The Red Sox started Jim Bagby and had a 4-0 lead until he blew up in the seventh, when the Browns tied the count against him and Jack Wilson.

The latter also worked in the eighth, followed by Fritz Ostermueller and Joe Heving, when the Browns pulled into an 8-5 lead with another four-run rally.

Cronin revived the Red Sox's drooping spirits by homering with Williams aboard in the eighth and Tabor followed his manager's example when he led off in the last of the ninth. The boxscore:

Allegany Defeats Hyndman Hi 8-3

Feature of the Allegany assault was a home run by Cochran on a line drive over the right fielder's head that broke a 3-3 deadlock. George Geatz, however, led the Allegany attack with three hits in four times at bat and added to his laurels with three thefts of bases. Klein had a double for another extra base blow.

Buddy Baer Stops Mann In 6th Round

New York, May 3 (AP) — Buddy Baer of Sacramento, Calif., won by a knockout over Nathan Mann of New Haven, Conn., after 1:36 of the seventh round of their scheduled 12-round bout at Madison Square Garden tonight. Baer weighed 249 and Mann, 188.

A right under the heart put Mann down for a nine count. He arose groggy and bleeding but fought back gamely, but mammoth Baer scented the kill and followed his opponent around the ring pouring in volleys of punishment from all directions.

Again Mann went down for nine and when he arose, his face a gory smear, he dazedly turned his back on Baer and started for his corner. Referee Arthur Donovan walked over to Baer and hoisted his hand as the winner.

Derby Field Expected To Be Short of Record

Louisville, Ky. (AP)—Veteran horsemen doubt that the number of starters in this year's Kentucky Derby will approach the record of twenty-two set in 1928, when Reigh Count emerged from the bulky field as winner.

There apparently is no method of determining until a day or so before the annual classic how many horses will start. In 1937, for example, War Admiral was the odds-on favorite and yet twenty horses went to the post. In other years when the pre-Derby favorite was not as clear cut, fewer horses started.

The smallest Derby field was three. On three occasions — in 1892, 1899 and 1905—only three contenders for Derby title faced the barrier.

Bill Niland Will Battle Boord on May 10 Fight Card

Complete Schedule of Bouts for Next Pro Program

A couple of Western Maryland's fistic favorites, "Wild Bill" Niland of Cumberland's glove colony and Woody Boord, who does his punching out of Uniontown, Pa., have been signed by the Cumberland Athletic Club to meet in one of the feature eight-rounders of next Friday night's professional boxing show at the State Armory.

The card's other eight-rounders will bring together "Tiger Red" Lewis, high-ranking light-heavyweight of Richmond, Va., and Ira Hughes, tough Pittsburgh negro who put the slug on Charlie Brant, of Somerset, Pa., here two months ago, in the feature number and Carl Turner, Fairmont (W. Va.) negro who holds the welterweight championship of that state, and Charlie Burns, the Johnstown, Pa., veteran who has met Henry Armstrong, Lou Ambers and other current and former titleholders during his colorful career, in the semi-windup.

Next week's show, in addition to the three eight-rounders, will include a six-round meeting between a couple of certified clouters, Charlie Brant and Cumberland's Clarence "Kayo" Shrout, and a four-round opener between Al Madero, of Frostburg, and "Bucky" Walbert, of Cumberland.

The area of Australia, 2,974,581 square miles, is capable of supporting a population of 150,000,000, yet only 6,000,000 people live there.

Weather Clears as Track Dries for Derby

Bimelech Odds On Favorite; Field Of Nine To Start

Sun and Fair Weather On Tap as 85,000 Fans Gather

By SID FEDER

Louisville, Ky., May 3 (AP)—Everything looked made to order for big Bimelech tonight.

The field of nine was named for today's sixty-sixth running of the Kentucky Derby and old man weather promised to turn off his sun and rain faucets for the big doings.

Derby-town was on its usual jam-packed Derby-eve merry-go-round accompanied by the customary musical comedy didoes in every hotel lobby.

With sun and fair weather on tap, it was conceivable that the turnout might skyrocket over the 80,000 mark anticipated at Churchill Downs for the annual four-star turf classic. The Derby field is slated to go to the post in the neighborhood of 4:45 p. m. (Central Standard Time) to the tune of "My Old Kentucky Home" sung by movie actress Irene Dunne.

Weather Clearing

It was still as cold as the inside of your ice box around here tonight but the track was slow, but the dirty grey sky sent a few rays of sunshine down late this afternoon and the weather man said he'd fix up just dandy tomorrow.

Mr. Weather didn't say positively but if he does his stuff and provides a fast running strip, it will just make the whole mile-and-a-quarter affair more lopsided for Bimmie. Bimmie is bidding a fifty Derby victory for Col. E. R. Bradley and who probably will be the shortest priced favorite in the history of the classic. He's as good as 2 to 5 in the mutuals, the betting boys and girls will consider it a bargain, indeed, and he wins (which just about everybody fully expects) he'll collect a cool $60,675 as the winner's end in the one-horse race.

Of the overnight field entered today—at least seven of which are definite starters—Bimelech is likely to have opposition only if the track is "off". With the exception of Arthur Hanger's Dit, the $4,000 Saratoga yearling sales bargain who romped off with the Wood Memorial last week, the standouts are the front-steppers, like William L. Brann's Pictor, a son of Challenger II, who really can run in the mud; Royal Man, bought by Harold Talbott Clark, of Miami Beach, Fla., last winter for $15,000; Joseph E. Widener's Roman, never beaten in mud, and Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Gallahadion.

Fast Track Threats

On a fast track the threats are Dit and Mioland, the California colt and hour boy with the international headlines, for whom Charles S. Howard kicked in $15,000 a few months back.

The other two in the field are Heather Broom, owned by Charles T. Fisher, of the Fisher Body Fishers, and the "wonder why" colt, True Star, a bidding sales purchase for $550 representing the barn of Martin J. Schmidtt, a local lawyer. True Star is a surprise entry this morning. Heather Broom will go to the post only if the track is fast, and may have a different jockey aboard him than the originally-slated Albert Bodiou. I expect Schmidtt will go through with starting his horse.

One of the mysteries around this horse-daffy town tonight was whether Col. Bradley, aged and all-powerful would come over from Lexington to see the colt he insists is the best he ever owned run for the all-important high Derby record for one mile. The colonel would like nothing better, but his physicians have warned against it, fearing the shock of victory or defeat may harm him. The excitement may possibly prove fatal. But Bradley has intimated that he may just slip off the doctors' advice and slip over the grounds inside his car.

Several "Dark Horses"

Bimelech, undefeated in eight starts over his two-year racing career, stands out as potentially the greatest thoroughbred since Man o' War and if he goes to the races he'll be six times as he's expected to be—the Preakness, the Belmont, the Withers and the Arlington Classic and a few others with big purses—he may wind up as a richer money winner than Seabiscuit.

Although he's just about as close to a unanimous choice as you can get without sewing the thing up in a bag, Bimmie has several "dark horses" to buck in this route gallop. Last year Johnstown had a year ago, and as the hunch players feel, it will be Dit, Pictor or Mioland, but the honest-to-goodness hardboot fans will talk the hoss-laugh when Bimmie runs down the stretch with his tongue sticking out the corner of his mouth, they tell you, will be nothing else in sight.

Louisville All Agog On Eve of Derby Race

Released by North American Newspaper Alliance

Louisville, Ky., May 3.—All Louisville and all the Kentucky Derby crowd is agog with doubt and speculation. This is the widest open Derby in years—for second, third, and fourth money.

Every horse in the race, except pointing for the second, third, and for something called Bimelech, is fourth prizes, which are pretty luxurious in themselves, and more than enough to defray the expense of shipping the animal to Churchill Downs to taste the kind of dust that Bimmy kicks up—said to be a dust of peculiarly rich and novel flavor, along the lines of vanilla.

Who is going to get the closest look at Bimelech's stern? That is the question which will continue to grip Louisville until Tuesday morning, when the second horse is expected to finish.

I am a very conscientious reporter, and would like to assure both members of my public that I will stick around the track till Wednesday fortnight, if necesary, to obtain the complete results of the race, such as place, show, etc., and etc.

Pictor and Mioland Must Hustle

By that time, racing experts estimate that Bimelech will have won the Preakness and been matched with Joe Louis for September. Life moves swiftly in this civilization, and if Dit, Pictor, and Mioland do not hustle, they won't be home in time to vote for Thomas E. Dewey.

Last year Johnstown took this race by the biggest margin in its history. He was eating dinner in his quarters, and looking over the box-score of the Red Sox game, when word reached him that Challedon had just flashed under the wire and that Heather Broom was coming like a cyclone.

Veracity compels me to report that Big John did not even take his coffee cup from his lips. He seems to have anticipated that the rest of the field would be home sooner or later.

Now, Challedon was a standout horse in section 2 (stops to take on sleepers at Cincinnati) of last year's Derby. He went on to become the standout horse of the year, when Johnstown began to whistle "Yankee Doodle" involuntarily.

Section 2 of this year's race does not seem to have a standout, as far as the crowd can discover. Mioland, Pictor, Dit, and Gallahadion are thought to possess a good chance of keeping Bimelech in view (through powerful glasses), but which of them is the best of the next best?

Never one to sidestep a knotty problem, I believe that Dit will finish second on a dry track and Pictor if the strip is damp. Some of the boys seem to feel, on the strength of his run in the Chesapeake at Havre De Grace, that Pictor, the W. L. Brann horse from the stable of Challedon, is strictly a mudder, and that Mioland, Gallahadion, and others will lope past him on a fast track.

Pride of the West Coast

The fact is, though, that Pictor can run pretty fast in any kind of footing. He won his debut of the year at Bowie in the sunshine, and won it by eight lengths in six furlongs, which means that he did not loiter. My hunch is that Pictor not only will cop third money regardless of the going, but will make Dit hustle for the place. And Dit is a real good horse.

Mioland is the pride of the west coast, whose gamblers—their name is Legion, or McLegion, or O'Legion, or something of the sort—bombarded the future books with bets and drove his price down to 4 to 1. I have an idea it will be better than that at the track, but maybe not. A lot of people like him.

In a race for 3-year-olds this early in the year, your inclination is to back the sharpest horses, the ones that have run, and run well, most recently. Bimelech, Pictor, and Dit are all recent winners of good races. Mioland has not been in competition since his winter campaign. Monentum is important (not always, but usually) in the Derby, and if Mioland has lost his momentum, he doesn't figure in the money.

On the other hand, the horse belongs to a very fortunate fellow, Charles S. "Lucky" Howard, and the Howard stable is hot. Its members include Seabiscuit and Kayak II, one-two in the last Santa Anita handicap. You are bucking destiny to some extent when you bet Mioland to finish out of the dough.

However, that is the way I am betting—Dit and Pictor (or Pictor and Dit) and Mioland. That's section 2—No observation car, drops mail at Toledo.

Bosox Take Lead In Junior Loop With 9 to 8 Win

Slugging of Jim Tabor Enables Boston To Defeat Browns

Boston, May 3 (AP)—The slugging of Jim Tabor gave the Red Sox a 9-8 victory over St. Louis in ten innings today and a lift over the idle Cleveland Indians into the American League's top rung.

Tabor's second homer tied the score in the ninth and his single with the bases loaded in the tenth brought in Ted Williams with the winning run.

Manager Joe Cronin and Williams also bashed out homers and Walter Judnich put the Browns in the ball game in the seventh by blasting out his fourth circuit drive of the season with two on base.

The Red Sox started Jim Bagby and had a 4-0 lead until he blew up in the seventh, when the Browns tied the count against him and Jack Wilson.

The latter also worked in the eighth, followed by Fritz Ostermueller and Joe Heving, when the Browns pulled into an 8-5 lead with another four-run rally.

Cronin revived the Red Sox's drooping spirits by homering with Williams aboard in the eighth and Tabor followed his manager's example when he led off in the last of the ninth. The boxscore:

Allegany Defeats Hyndman Hi 8-3

Allegany high school's baseball team defeated Hyndman high yesterday 8 to 3 in a scholastic conference game at Hyndman.

The Campobello clubbers garnered nine hits off the slants of Holler and Evans while Conners limited the Hyndman hitters to four safeties.

Feature of the Allegany assault was a home run by Cochran on a line drive over the right fielder's head that broke a 3-3 deadlock. George Geatz, however, led the Allegany attack with three hits in four times at bat and added to his laurels with three thefts of bases. Klein had a double for another extra base blow.

Fielding feature was Hines' one-handed stab of Lou Bell's liner in the fifth.

Buddy Baer Stops Mann In 6th Round

New York, May 3 (AP) — Buddy Baer of Sacramento, Calif., won by a knockout over Nathan Mann of New Haven, Conn., after 1:36 of the seventh round of their scheduled 12-round bout at Madison Square Garden tonight. Baer weighed 249 and Mann, 188.

The end came with dramatic abruptness after six rounds in which the lighter Mann held his own and carried the fight to the apathetic Baer.

Leaping from his stool at the start of the seventh, Baer rushed across the ring and began to belabor Mann with a series of long, vicious rights and lefts.

A right under the heart put Mann down for a nine count. He arose groggy and bleeding but fought back gamely, but mammoth Baer scented the kill and followed his opponent around the ring pouring in volleys of punishment from all directions.

Again Mann went down for nine and when he arose, his face a gory smear, he dazedly turned his back on Baer and started for his corner. Referee Arthur Donovan walked over to Baer and hoisted his hand as the winner.

Derby Field Expected To Be Short of Record

Louisville, Ky. (AP)—Veteran horsemen doubt that the number of starters in this year's Kentucky Derby will approach the record of twenty-two set in 1928, when Reigh Count emerged from the bulky field as winner.

There apparently is no method of determining until a day or so before the annual classic how many horses will start. In 1937, for example, War Admiral was the odds-on favorite and yet twenty horses went to the post. In other years when the pre-Derby favorite was not as clear cut, fewer horses started.

The smallest Derby field was three. On three occasions — in 1892, 1899 and 1905—only three contenders for Derby title faced the barrier.

Complete Schedule of Bouts for Next Pro Program

A couple of Western Maryland's fistic favorites, "Wild Bill" Niland of Cumberland's glove colony and Woody Boord, who does his punching out of Uniontown, Pa., have been signed by the Cumberland Athletic Club to meet in one of the feature eight-rounders of next Friday night's professional boxing show at the State Armory.

The card's other eight-rounders will bring together "Tiger Red" Lewis, high-ranking light-heavyweight of Richmond, Va., and Ira Hughes, tough Pittsburgh negro who put the slug on Charlie Brant, of Somerset, Pa., here two months ago, in the feature number and Carl Turner, Fairmont (W. Va.) negro who holds the welterweight championship of that state, and Charlie Burns, the Johnstown, Pa., veteran who has met Henry Armstrong, Lou Ambers and other current and former titleholders during his colorful career, in the semi-windup.

Next week's show, in addition to the three eight-rounders, will include a six-round meeting between a couple of certified clouters, Charlie Brant and

Misuse of Official Stationery Charged

Attorney-General Hit For Use of Letterhead In Bruce Campaign

M. F. Prendergast, chairman of the Radcliffe campaign committee in Allegany county, last night charged "wanton waste of state-purchased stationery" in the furtherance of the candidacy of Radcliffe's opponent for the Democratic senatorial nomination, Howard Bruce.

Prendergast said he had obtained a copy of a letter received by a Cumberland voter and written on stationery from the office of Attorney-General William C. Walsh.

Telegram Quoted

Prendergast said he had sent the following telegram to Governor O'Conor:

"I call to your attention the extravagant use here today of the attorney-general's office stationery for a personal appeal by William C. Walsh for support of Howard Bruce. With more than 18,000 registered Democratic voters in this county, this is a wanton waste of state purchased stationery, and I would like to know if the stamps used to mail these letters were also state property or bought by Bruce supporters here?

"You speak of state economies; yet how can you explain this flagrant use of a state office and state property to solicit support for a political candidate?

"Many people think this is a command coming from the attorney-general of the state. Is the use of state stationery the rule rather than the exception with all other state officeholders?

"M. F. PRENDERGAST"

Walsh Replies

When told of the Prendergast statement, Attorney-General Walsh had this to say:

"I anticipated something of this sort. I have this to say. The stationery and stamps for those letters were bought and paid for by the Bruce Campaign Committee of Allegany county. And they were mailed from Cumberland."

In a counter-attack, Prendergast retorted:

"If the Bruce campaign committee purchased the stationery of the attorney general's office then Mr. Walsh, as attorney-general, was acting as a salesman for state-owned property.

"Furthermore, Attorney-General Walsh, by his statement, admits that he was a party to the scheme to coerce and intimidate the voters of the county into voting for Howard Bruce by use of the stationery of the legal department of the Free State of Maryland.

"Mr. Walsh went so far as to send one of these appeals to my wife and to the wives of other men who are supporting Senator Radcliffe. I will not comment on such unmitigated gall."

Business Outlook Good, Smith Says, Back from Parley

Industrial Frontier Just Opening Up, Business Men Agree

H. W. Smith, secretary of the Cumberland Chamber of Commerce, was back at his desk yesterday afternoon after attending the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce in Washington.

Greatly cheered by the optimism exhibited by some 2,500 industrial leaders from all over the United States, Smith gave reporters a factual report of the group.

Industrial Frontier 'Opening Up'

Business men were uniformly agreed that the industrial frontiers of America, rather than expended to the utmost, were actually "just beginning to open up," he said.

Smith quoted an address by Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan-American Airways, as a pertinent example of what the nation's industrialists meant.

Trippe told the members that airlines in this country had placed orders amounting to ten million dollars for new flying equipment in the last ten weeks.

Airlines To Expand

Within a year, the airlines will inaugurate daily clipper service to and from Europe, Trippe said. A new ship has been developed which will fly in the sub-stratosphere, he added.

Asked just what this step would mean to the aviation industry, Smith said Trippe's explanation was that it meant this particular type of ship could fly above weather conditions and against less resistance, thus insuring both greater safety and greater speed.

Stressing the immensity of the fast growing air transport service, Trippe said that last year it amounted to a fifty million dollar business, with all transport companies making money and practically unsubsidized.

Plastics Industry Developing

At the present time, Trippe said, the revenue derived by the federal government from airmail postage is as much as the postoffice department pays for all carriage of mail.

Another industrial channel rapidly opening up is the chemicals business, Smith said. Particular development was reported in the plastics field.

Asked what feeling was expressed in regard to the European war, Smith said the group agreed to string along with the platform originally set up by former President W. Gibson Carey, Jr., which quoted the U. S. Chamber as not being interested in war business or war profits and that the matter of primary importance was for the United States to stay clear of the struggle.

Sound Financial Policy

Asked to elucidate further on the optimism expressed by business men at the conference, Smith said they were agreed that times would be good, provided governmental regulation of business was eliminated and provided a sound governmental financial policy was set up and adhered to.

Summing up his impressions of the conference, the Cumberland secretary said he was particularly impressed by the report of new industry opening up at the present time and the gigantic strides being made by the aviation industry.

According to the reports of aviation leaders, schedules in South America are increasing in effectiveness monthly, a fact that augurs well for this country's export trade in the South Americas. The speed of the airline service is destined to give American business men a great advantage over competitors elsewhere, Smith said.

Father and Son Held as Moonshiners; Looking over Real Estate, They Say

Despite their protestations of innocence, a 63-year-old man and his 40-year-old son were ordered held yesterday for action of a federal grand jury on charges of operating an unregistered still.

Charles D. Wigley, the father, and Charles L. Wigley, of near Bloomington, were ordered held in the county jail in default of bond after a preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner James Alfred Avirett. Bond for the younger Wigley, who allegedly has a record of two previous convictions on federal liquor charges, was set at $1,000 that for his father, at $500.

The defendants, represented by Attorney Estel C. Kelley, denied even knowing of the existence of the still and said they were in the vicinity to look over some land they were considering buying.

But David H. Walker, Federal Alcohol Tax Unit agent, identified the pair as the two men he had seen at the still just a few minutes before they were captured about 100 yards frrom the plant.

Walker, along with Agent Charles E. Cushwa, arrested the men Wednesday and confiscated the 65-gallon still and 150 gallons of mash.

The agents said the still was located along the Savage river, about two miles from Bloomingt

Blacksmith, 70, Is Licensed To Wed As Spring Comes to the Courthouse

The blacksmith was Charles Gantt, a widower; his bride, Mrs. Myrtle Albertha Mackert.

Mrs. Mackert won a divorce April 25 from Edward A. Mackert on grounds of desertion. The couple had been wed in April, 1912, and lived together until August, 1926, court records showed.

Another couple made news at the court house yesterday by appearing to claim a license for which they had applied seven months ago. They were John William Kalp, 32-year-old miner of Wilpen, Pa., and Dorothy Mae McLean, 22, also of Wilpen.

The couple had applied for the license October 16. In the interim, each had had a birthday, and the license records had to be changed accordingly.

Respect Rights Of Farmers, Anglers Urged

Evitts Creek Land May Be Posted, Game Warden Warns

Regional Game Warden Joseph A. Minke appealed to fishermen last night to respect farmers' rights and treat them with courtesy.

There is danger that much of the land through which Evitts creek runs will be posted against anglers, Minke said, because of the ill-mannered conduct of a few of them.

The game warden said he had received complaints that some fishermen were walking through grainfields and climbing over and through fences instead of using the gates. Others blithely ignore the landowner even if they happen to see him, he added.

He said the farmers along the creek are generally cooperative with sportsmen but that their patience is nearing exhaustion as a result of gross disrespect of their rights.

On the Deep Creek lake front, Minke reported that he saw nearly 600 wild ducks on the lake yesterday—the largest number he had ever seen in Western Maryland at one time.

The game warden said a wintry storm which swept Garrett county had apparently forced them down in their northward migration to their nesting areas.

Bruce Workers Hold Parley

225 Attend Meeting; Walsh Is Speaker

More than 225 Bruce-for-Senator workers from all over Allegany county congregated at the Democratic Cosmopolitan Club here last night for their final get-to-gether of the primary campaign.

Big gun at last night's meeting was Attorney-General William C. Walsh who gave the workers minute directions concerning Monday's primary.

Walsh urged the workers to be absolutely certain there were no slip-ups regarding the delegates the Bruce supporters are backing to go to the State Democratic convention.

The seven candidates backed by the Bruce forces are Oliver H. Bruce Jr., W. Earle Cobey, John J. McMullen, Elizabeth R. Menefee, Edward J. Ryan, Patrick J. "Derby" Stakem and Walsh.

Workers last night commented on the Democratic registration Tuesday and made plans for greater efforts to register new Democrats in the fall.

Commenting on the status of the Bruce campaign throughout the state, Walsh said Baltimore Bruce backers were confident of victory and that Bruce had made great gains throughout the entire state in the last month.

Others who spoke at last night's meeting were Edward J. Ryan, county chairman of the Bruce-for-Senator campaign; William L. Wilson Jr., Oliver H. Bruce Jr., Michael J. Byrnes and Mrs. Elizabeth Menefee.

The buck apparently died shortly after being struck, and the carcass was not in edible condition, the game warden added.

Residents of Slabtown Buy It from County

The county commissioners sold a town yesterday.

The town was Slabtown, near Mt. Savage. The purchase price was $1,001, an dthe buyers were the town's six residents.

The county bought in the town for taxes about a year ago and rented the six houses. After allowing a year's grace for the owner, the Rowe Brothers Mining Company, to repurchase the property, the commissioners advertised it for sale.

A group of real estate men and the residents were the only bidders. Bidding started at $800, and the real estate men withdrew after the price reached $1,000.

The residents, Francis Reed Boor, Kilgore Izzett, Robert L. Aldridge, Lewis J. Bridges, Charles Hughes and James P. Russell, then bought it in for $1,001.

The town, unincorporated, was built up around a now-abandoned mining operation.

37 Motor Vehicle Deaths in April

Baltimore, May 3 (AP) — Thirty-seven motor vehicle deaths in Maryland counties in April ruined the state's 1940 safety record, the State Police Accident Prevention Bureau disclosed.

Traffic accidents caused thirty-five of the deaths, while two others involving motor vehicles occurred on private property.

In April of last year, only nineteen motor vehicle fatalities were recorded in the counties. During the first four months of 1939, the total deaths numbered sixty-seven; for the same period this year, the total was eighty-nine — an increase of twenty-two.

Police safety experts said the sharp increase this year—largely as a result of the poor April record—could not be ascribed to any one cause. The type of accidents appeared fairly general, with fatalities boosted by at least one instance of multiple deaths in a grade crossing accident.

Conlon Assails Radcliffe Bid For Vets' Vote

Howard Bruce Friend Of War Veterans, Says City Councilman

United States Senator George L. Radcliffe's bid to impress the veteran vote of Allegany county was assailed last night by Thomas F. Conlon, city commissioner, in an address endorsing the candidacy of Howard Bruce.

Commenting on Senator Radcliffe's visit to both veteran homes in Cumberland during his recent visit, Conlon declared that neither the American Legion nor the Veterans of Foreign Wars is a political organization nor takes partisan stands in politics.

In answer to a statement to the effect that Bruce had ignored the veterans in his Cumberland visit, Conlon said "those in charge of Mr. Bruce's campaign in Allegany county, a great many of whom are members of the American Legion or the Veterans of Foreign Wars, did not take Mr. Bruce to visit the homes because they felt it would be improper to do so."

"It might be pointed out," Conlon continued, "that Senator Radcliffe has slighted the whole of Allegany county since he has been a member of the United States Senate, because so far as I can recall he never once visited the county from the time of his election until last week when he came to ask us to vote for him again."

Declaring that he was not impressed with the Senator when he made his tour in this section, Conlon declared Radcliffe made "a number of astonishing promises and statements."

The Senator's indication that he would help the people of Mt. Savage get a new school, was hit by Conlon. "The Senator knows," Conlon said, "that this is purely a matter for the local school board, a majority of whom are Republicans, and he knows that he has no more to do with the matter than a Chinaman.

"The fact that he endeavored to get votes in Mt. Savage by indicating that he could help them get a school is a sad commentary on the sort of politics he is playing, and it certainly shows that he does not have a very high opinion of the people of Mt. Savage, if he thinks they will fall for such a line."

After lambasting Senator Radcliffe's tactics and his record on veterans' legislation, Conlon praised Howard Bruce for securing positions for everyone of his employes who had been in service when the war was over.

"He [Bruce] has for some years devoted his attention to securing work for men and women over forty-five years of age," Conlon said, "and has promised, if elected to the Senate, to work out a national plan which will take care of those over forty-five.

"The veterans are particularly interested in this because the present age of World war veterans is forty-seven years, and we all know that it is becoming increasingly difficult, because of this age question, for veterans to secure jobs."

"Furthermore, Mr. Bruce has stated in his campaign he will support and fight for all legislation that is fair and just to the veterans, and he has pledged himself to work for an additional veterans' hospital in this state," Conlon said.

Water-Line Breaks; 'Explosion' Is Loud

Members of the water department's maintenance crew hurried to Chase and Washington streets late yesterday afternoon to repair a broken four-inch water-line that exploded.

The line let go with a shattering explosion, according to one informant, who said the noise brought residents out of their homes to investigate.

According to City Plumber S. J. Carroll, such explosions are not unusual in water-lines and are generally caused by an air bubble.

Homes on Washington, Allegany and Chase streets were without water for approximately four hours from 3 to 7 yesterday as a result of the break, Carroll said. The maintenance crew had the line repaired by 7 p. m.

Holy Name Society To Honor Hero Of John Brown Rebellion Sunday

The Holy Name Society of the Western Section, Richmond Diocesean Union will dedicate tomorrow a stone on the grave of Luke Quinn, a practically unknown hero of the historic Harper's Ferry affair, J. L. Daugherty, of Ridgeley, announced yesterday.

Luke Quinn was born in Ireland in the year of 1835 and came to the United States at the age of nine. He enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in November, 1855.

When John Brown and his followers rebelled against the government October 16, 1859, terrorizing the citizens and killing some of them in taking possession of the United States Arsenal located at Harper's Ferry, Colonel Robert E. Lee, later the Confederate commander-in-chief, was ordered to Harper's Ferry with a company of Marines to capture John Brown and his followers.

Luke Quinn was a private in this company. On the morning of October 18 in storming the engine house where John Brown and his men had barricaded themselves, Private Luke Quinn was mortally wounded. He was the only Marine to lose his life in subduing this rebellion later known as John Brown's raid.

He was buried in St. Peter's cemetery at Bolivar just on the outskirts of Harper's Ferry. For years his grave was forgotten but the late Dr. Walter Dittemeyer, decided to find his grave among the many and have a stone erected to mark the resting place of this hero.

Unfortunately Dr. Dittemeyer died before completing this task. The Holy Name men of the Western Section are fulfilling Dr. Dittemeyer's wish tomorrow.

United States Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, and Representative Jennings Randolph of the Second Congressional district of West Virginia have accepted invitations to be present. Lieutenant John S. Oldfield, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., will be among the speakers.

Mrs. Kastner was admitted to the hospital for observation. The extent of her injury will not be known until x-rays are taken.

Crowd of 75,000 Sees Big Parade At Winchester

Gray Skies, Chill Air Fail To Dampen Apple Blossom Fete

Winchester, Va., May 3 (AP) — Regal in her coronation gown and wearing a gilded crown upon her dark tresses, Senorita Lillian Somoza, 18-year-old daughter of the president of Nicaragua, led the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival parade down gaily decorated streets today before a crowd authorities estimated at 75,000.

The fete, which for seventeen years has glorified the apple industry, was staged under sombre skies in a chilled atmosphere.

Fifty-Two Bands

Dr. Lewis M. Allen was chief marshall for the parade, which included scores of gay floats and fifty-two bands, several led by high-stepping, strutting drum majorettes.

The blossom queen's birthday ball tonight concluded the two-day festival.

Handley high school's pageant, "Quest of Beauty," presented under adverse weather conditions following Senorita Somoza's coronation yesterday afternoon, was not repeated today as the result of a morning drizzle.

Long Promises To Keep U. S. Out of War

Republican Candidate For House Seat Announces Platform

Frank Long, Kensington attorney, last night appealed to Allegany county Republicans to nominate him for the Sixth district seat in the House of Representatives.

In a rapid-fire statement of his views on national and state problems, Long said he "will do everything in my power to keep our country out of war."

Speaking over the radio, the candidate also listed other planks in his platform as follows:

The farmer must get more of his proposed benefits, and the wolves must be taken away from his door.

The milk dollar belongs to the farmer.

Taxes must and will be reduced.

WPA will not be ditched until jobs are created and wages are paid. It will be taken out of politics and returned to the states.

Opening of county offices, if elected, so citizens can see their representative without journeying to Washington.

Coordination the activities of the Chamber of Commerce and other cooperating agencies with the local, state and national economy and sociology.

Hits Tax Exempt Bond

"My determination is to make Maryland a better place to live in," Long declared.

Commenting on taxation, Long inquired, "Why should the rest of us have to pay tax while those of wealth and leisure escape. It just isn't right and everybody knows it. What has happened. Nothing, you say. But the rich still clip their coupons while the government clips your pay checks.

O'Conor, Long declared, has expressed himself against the taxation of Maryland securities and said that "you can only conclude that he prefers that you, who work for a living, should not be relieved of your tax load in the slightest by making the rich possessors of tax exempt securities pay their share.

'Poor Soaked To Spare Rich'

"I say it is too bad when the credit of the state is so bad that the poor are soaked to spare the rich, who will not lend unless they are exempted from taxation," Long went on.

"Do you wonder that one-half billion dollars can be spared for campaign when your leaders see them taxation of three or four times that much? But the governor was right——the gang has so many lawyers subsidized, milk-fed jobs that if you ever put a tax on the big boys they too would be shouting their heads off for economic government and then we should have reduced taxation. Thanks to the admission governor, and if you don't repeal that income tax, someone will go to Annapolis in 1942 and do it for you."

Discusses Housing

"And do not forget this theory of housing is different with different groups, Long continued. "You are fed up. Very well. That you should have a better and more beautiful home, and you like it. But there is the life-long eternal interest to pay—and pay you must—until some economical upheaval, you lose all your equity therein—and who cares?

"Why did they get you into it in the first place? Simply because as beautiful and truthful as is the essay of better homes for all people they wanted to shift the tax load from the rich, with their tax exempt securities to the backs of the poor. And if that is not a truism, let them figure me out, because I am going to protect you in your investments if given the chance. To all alike and there will be plenty of cheap interest on homes."

Legislation Science

"The science of legislation," Long told his radio audience, "is more than problem solving, the preparation, introduction, sponsoring, steering and enactment of laws; it is the ability to analyze and see the folklore of political science in legislation, and to be courageous in resisting it.

"I do not justify anyone who thinks he could get anywhere as a candidate stooging a less hopeful candidate in an effort and on a platform which has been repudiated simply because a secret deal which is admitted to have been repudiated.

"That is the folklore of political science," Long concluded.

Irvine Investigates Bill From County Board

Mayor Harry Irvine yesterday announced his intention of investigating a bill of $10.67 received from the Allegany county commissioners for services of Harold E. Naughton as magistrate of the Juvenile Court.

The bill shows Naughton to have worked one day in February at three in April at eight dollars a day. The county is liable for two-thirds of the total cost, or $21.33, and the city for the rest.

The bill states the law provides that the magistrate is empowered to name a substitute for not more than fifteen days. In conversation with R. Mason Hill, clerk to the commissioners, Mayor Irvine learned that Mrs. Elizabeth R. Menefee, the juvenile magistrate, is allowed fifteen days off without pay.

Misuse of Official Stationery Charged

Attorney-General Hit For Use of Letterhead In Bruce Campaign

M. F. Prendergast, chairman of the Radcliffe campaign committee in Allegany county, last night charged "wanton waste of state-purchased stationery" in the furtherance of the candidacy of Radcliffe's opponent for the Democratic senatorial nomination, Howard Bruce.

Prendergast said he had obtained a copy of a letter received by a Cumberland voter and written on stationery from the office of Attorney-General William C. Walsh.

Telegram Quoted

Prendergast said he had sent the following telegram to Governor O'Conor:

"I call to your attention the extravagant use here today of the attorney-general's office stationery for a personal appeal by William C. Walsh for support of Howard Bruce. With more than 18,000 registered Democratic voters in this county, this is a wanton waste of state purchased stationery, and I would like to know if the stamps used to mail these letters were also state property or bought by Bruce supporters here?

"You speak of state economies; yet how can you explain this flagrant use of a state office and state property to solicit support for a political candidate?

"Many people think this is a command coming from the attorney-general of the state. Is the use of state stationery the rule rather than the exception with all other state officeholders?

"M. F. PRENDERGAST"

Walsh Replies

When told of the Prendergast statement, Attorney-General Walsh had this to say:

"I anticipated something of this sort. I have this to say. The stationery and stamps for those letters were bought and paid for by the Bruce Campaign Committee of Allegany county. And they were mailed from Cumberland."

In a counter-attack, Prendergast retorted:

"If the Bruce campaign committee purchased the stationery of the attorney general's office then Mr. Walsh, as attorney-general, was acting as a salesman for state-owned property.

"Furthermore, Attorney-General Walsh, by his statement, admits that he was a party to the scheme to coerce and intimidate the voters of the county into voting for Howard Bruce by use of the stationery of the legal department of the Free State of Maryland.

"Mr. Walsh went so far as to send one of these appeals to my wife and to the wives of other men who are supporting Senator Radcliffe. I will not comment on such unmitigated gall."

Business Outlook Good, Smith Says, Back from Parley

Industrial Frontier Just Opening Up, Business Men Agree

H. W. Smith, secretary of the Cumberland Chamber of Commerce, was back at his desk yesterday afternoon after attending the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce in Washington.

Greatly cheered by the optimism exhibited by some 2,500 industrial leaders from all over the United States, Smith gave reporters a factual report of the group.

Industrial Frontier 'Opening Up'

Business men were uniformly agreed that the industrial frontiers of America, rather than expended to the utmost, were actually "just beginning to open up," he said.

Smith quoted an address by Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan-American Airways, as a pertinent example of what the nation's industrialists meant.

Trippe told the members that airlines in this country had placed orders amounting to ten million dollars for new flying equipment in the last ten weeks.

Airlines To Expand

Within a year, the airlines will inaugurate daily clipper service to and from Europe, Trippe said. A new ship has been developed which will fly in the sub-stratosphere, he added.

Asked just what this step would mean to the aviation industry, Smith said Trippe's explanation was that it meant this particular type of ship could fly above weather conditions and against less resistance, thus insuring both greater safety and greater speed.

Stressing the immensity of the fast growing air transport service, Trippe said that last year it amounted to a fifty million dollar business, with all transport companies making money and practically unsubsidized.

Plastics Industry Developing

At the present time, Trippe said, the revenue derived by the federal government from airmail postage is as much as the postoffice department pays for all carriage of mail.

Another industrial channel rapidly opening up is the chemicals business, Smith said. Particular development was reported in the plastics field.

Asked what feeling was expressed in regard to the European war, Smith said the group agreed to string along with the platform originally set up by former President W. Gibson Carey, Jr., which quoted the U. S. Chamber as not being interested in war business or war profits and that the matter of primary importance was for the United States to stay clear of the struggle.

Sound Financial Policy

Asked to elucidate further on the optimism expressed by business men at the conference, Smith said they were agreed that times would be good, provided governmental regulation of business was eliminated and provided a sound governmental financial policy was set up and adhered to.

Summing up his impressions of the conference, the Cumberland secretary said he was particularly impressed by the report of new industry opening up at the present time and the gigantic strides being made by the aviation industry.

According to the reports of aviation leaders, schedules in South America are increasing in effectiveness monthly, a fact that augurs well for this country's export trade in the South Americas. The speed of the airline service is destined to give American business men a great advantage over competitors elsewhere, Smith said.

Blacksmith, 70, Is Licensed To Wed As Spring Comes to the Courthouse

Although the chill temperature outside belied it, it was spring at the marriage license bureau at the court house yesterday.

Brisk business was reported again, with ten licenses issued.

The blacksmith was Charles Gantt, a widower; his bride, Mrs. Myrtle Albertha Mackert.

Mrs. Mackert won a divorce April 25 from Edward A. Mackert on grounds of desertion. The couple had been wed in April, 1912, and lived together until August, 1926, court records showed.

Another couple made news at the court house yesterday by appearing to claim a license for which they had applied seven months ago. They were John William Kalp, 32-year-old miner of Wilpen, Pa., and Dorothy Mae McLean, 22, also of Wilpen.

The couple had applied for the license October 16. In the interim, each had had a birthday, and the license records had to be changed accordingly.

Respect Rights Of Farmers, Anglers Urged

Evitts Creek Land May Be Posted, Game Warden Warns

Regional Game Warden Joseph A. Minke appealed to fishermen last night to respect farmers' rights and treat them with courtesy.

There is danger that much of the land through which Evitts creek runs will be posted against anglers, Minke said, because of the ill-mannered conduct of a few of them.

The game warden said he had received complaints that some fishermen were walking through grainfields and climbing over and through fences instead of using the gates. Others blithely ignore the landowner even if they happen to see him, he added.

He said the farmers along the creek are generally cooperative with sportsmen but that their patience is nearing exhaustion as a result of gross disrespect of their rights.

On the Deep Creek lake front, Minke reported that he saw nearly 600 wild ducks on the lake yesterday—the largest number he had ever seen in Western Maryland at one time.

The game warden said a wintry storm which swept Garrett county had apparently forced them down in their northward migration to their nesting areas.

The county commissioners sold a town yesterday.

The town was Slabtown, near Mt. Savage. The purchase price was $1,001, an dthe buyers were the town's six residents.

The county bought in the town for taxes about a year ago and rented the six houses. After allowing a year's grace for the owner, the Rowe Brothers Mining Company, to repurchase the property, the commissioners advertised it for sale.

A group of real estate men and the residents were the only bidders. Bidding started at $800, and the real estate men withdrew after the price reached $1,000.

The residents, Francis Reed Boor, Kilgore Izzett, Robert L. Aldridge, Lewis J. Bridges, Charles Hughes and James P. Russell, then bought it in for $1,001.

The town, unincorporated, was built up around a now-abandoned mining operation.

37 Motor Vehicle Deaths in April

Baltimore, May 3 (AP) — Thirty-seven motor vehicle deaths in Maryland counties in April ruined the state's 1940 safety record, the State Police Accident Prevention Bureau disclosed.

Traffic accidents caused thirty-five of the deaths, while two others involving motor vehicles occurred on private property.

In April of last year, only nineteen motor vehicle fatalities were recorded in the counties. During the first four months of 1939, the total deaths numbered sixty-seven; for the same period this year, the total was eighty-nine — an increase of twenty-two.

Police safety experts said the sharp increase this year—largely as a result of the poor April record—could not be ascribed to any one cause. The type of accidents appeared fairly general, with fatalities boosted by at least one instance of multiple deaths in a grade crossing accident.

Conlon Assails Radcliffe Bid For Vets' Vote

Howard Bruce Friend Of War Veterans, Says City Councilman

United States Senator George L. Radcliffe's bid to impress the veteran vote of Allegany county was assailed last night by Thomas F. Conlon, city commissioner, in an address endorsing the candidacy of Howard Bruce.

Commenting on Senator Radcliffe's visit to both veteran homes in Cumberland during his recent visit, Conlon declared that neither the American Legion nor the Veterans of Foreign Wars is a political organization nor takes partisan stands in politics.

In answer to a statement to the effect that Bruce had ignored the veterans in his Cumberland visit, Conlon said "those in charge of Mr. Bruce's campaign in Allegany county, a great many of whom are members of the American Legion or the Veterans of Foreign Wars, did not take Mr. Bruce to visit the homes because they felt it would be improper to do so."

"It might be pointed out," Conlon continued, "that Senator Radcliffe has slighted the whole of Allegany county since he has been a member of the United States Senate, because so far as I can recall he never once visited the county from the time of his election until last week when he came to ask us to vote for him again."

Declaring that he was not impressed with the Senator when he made his tour in this section, Conlon declared Radcliffe made "a number of astonishing promises and statements."

The Senator's indication that he would help the people of Mt. Savage get a new school, was hit by Conlon. "The Senator knows," Conlon said, "that this is purely a matter for the local school board, a majority of whom are Republicans, and he knows that he has no more to do with the matter than a Chinaman.

"The fact that he endeavored to get votes in Mt. Savage by indicating that he could help them get a school is a sad commentary on the sort of politics he is playing, and it certainly shows that he does not have a very high opinion of the people of Mt. Savage, if he thinks they will fall for such a line."

After lambasting Senator Radcliffe's tactics and his record on veterans' legislation, Conlon praised Howard Bruce for securing positions for everyone of his employes who had been in service when the war was over.

"He [Bruce] has for some years devoted his attention to securing work for men and women over forty-five years of age," Conlon said, "and has promised, if elected to the Senate, to work out a national plan which will take care of those over forty-five.

"The veterans are particularly interested in this because the present age of World war veterans is forty-seven years, and we all know that it is becoming increasingly difficult, because of this age question, for veterans to secure jobs."

"Furthermore, Mr. Bruce has stated in his campaign he will support and fight for all legislation that is fair and just to the veterans, and he has pledged himself to work for an additional veterans' hospital in this state," Conlon said.

Water-Line Breaks; 'Explosion' Is Loud

Members of the water department's maintenance crew hurried to Chase and Washington streets late yesterday afternoon to repair a broken four-inch water-line that exploded.

The line let go with a shattering explosion, according to one informant, who said the noise brought residents out of their homes to investigate.

According to City Plumber S. J. Carroll, such explosions are not unusual in water-lines and are generally caused by an air bubble.

Homes on Washington, Allegany and Chase streets were without water for approximately four hours from 3 to 7 yesterday as a result of the break, Carroll said. The maintenance crew had the line repaired by 7 p. m.

Woman, 91, Hurt in Fall While Whitewashing

A 91-year-old woman was admitted to Allegany hospital late yesterday afternoon after a fall in the yard of her home at 627 Fairview avenue.

According to hospital attendants, Mrs. Mary Kastner was engaged in whitewashing a fence when she fell and injured her right shoulder.

Mrs. Kastner was admitted to the hospital for observation. The extent of her injury will not be known until x-rays are taken.

Crowd of 75,000 Sees Big Parade At Winchester

Gray Skies, Chill Air Fail To Dampen Apple Blossom Fete

Winchester, Va., May 3 (AP) — Regal in her coronation gown and wearing a gilded crown upon her dark tresses, Senorita Lillian Somoza, 18-year-old daughter of the president of Nicaragua, led the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival parade down gaily decorated streets today before a crowd authorities estimated at 75,000.

The fete, which for seventeen years has glorified the apple industry, was staged under sombre skies in a chilled atmosphere.

Fifty-Two Bands

Dr. Lewis M. Allen was chief marshall for the parade, which included scores of gay floats and fifty-two bands, several led by high-stepping, strutting drum majorettes.

The queen and her court left their floats near Handley high school campus for a reviewing stand, where each unit passed in review. A dozen of the bands were massed immediately after the parade and a concert given under the direction of Maurice Spitalny.

The blossom queen's birthday ball tonight concluded the two-day festival.

Handley high school's pageant, "Quest of Beauty," presented under adverse weather conditions following Senorita Somoza's coronation yesterday afternoon, was not repeated today as the result of a morning drizzle.

Addresses were made by John Paul Murray, Alvin E. Yaste and Simon F. Reilly, all of Cumberland; James Paul Stakem, of Midland; Owen Winters, of Midlothian; and Howard Langler, of Gilmore.

Holy Name Society To Honor Hero Of John Brown Rebellion Sunday

The Holy Name Society of the Western Section, Richmond Diocesean Union will dedicate tomorrow a stone on the grave of Luke Quinn, a practically unknown hero of the historic Harper's Ferry affair, J. L. Daugherty, of Ridgeley, announced yesterday.

Luke Quinn was born in Ireland in the year of 1835 and came to the United States at the age of nine. He enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in November, 1855.

When John Brown and his followers rebelled against the government October 16, 1859, terrorizing the citizens and killing some of them in taking possession of the United States Arsenal located at Harper's Ferry, Colonel Robert E. Lee, later the Confederate commander-in-chief, was ordered to Harper's Ferry with a company of Marines to capture John Brown and his followers.

Luke Quinn was a private in this company. On the morning of October 18 in storming the engine house where John Brown and his men had barricaded themselves, Private Luke Quinn was mortally wounded. He was the only Marine to lose his life in subduing this rebellion later known as John Brown's raid.

He was buried in St. Peter's cemetery at Bolivar just on the outskirts of Harper's Ferry. For years his grave was forgotten but the late Dr. Walter Dittemeyer, decided to find his grave among the many and have a stone erected to mark the resting place of this hero.

Unfortunately Dr. Dittemeyer died before completing this task. The Holy Name men of the Western Section are fulfilling Dr. Dittemeyer's wish tomorrow.

United States Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, and Representative Jennings Randolph of the Second Congressional district of West Virginia have accepted invitations to be present. Lieutenant John S. Oldfield, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., will be among the speakers.

Long Promises To Keep U. S. Out of War

Republican Candidate For House Seat Announces Platform

Frank Long, Kensington attorney, last night appealed to Allegany county Republicans to nominate him for the Sixth district seat in the House of Representatives.

In a rapid-fire statement of his views on national and state problems, Long said he "will do everything in my power to keep our country out of war."

Speaking over the radio, the candidate also listed other planks in his platform as follows:

The farmer must get more of his proposed benefits, and the wolves must be taken away from his door.

The milk dollar belongs to the farmer.

Taxes must and will be reduced.

WPA will not be ditched until jobs are created and wages are paid. It will be taken out of politics and returned to the states.

Opening of county offices, if elected, so citizens can see their representative without journeying to Washington.

Coordination the activities of the Chamber of Commerce and other cooperating agencies with the local, state and national economy and sociology.

Hits Tax Exempt Bond

"My determination is to make Maryland a better place to live in," Long declared.

Commenting on taxation, Long inquired, "Why should the rest of us have to pay tax while those of wealth and leisure escape. It just isn't right and everybody knows it. What has happened. Nothing, yet. But the rich still clip their coupons while the government clips your pay checks.

O'Conor, Long declared, has expressed himself against the taxation of Maryland securities and said that "you can only conclude that he prefers that you, who work for a living, should not be relieved of your tax load in the slightest by making the rich possessors of tax-exempt securities pay their share."

'Poor Soaked To Spare Rich'

"I say it is too bad when the credit of the state is so bad that the poor are soaked to spare the rich, who will not lend unless they are exempted from taxation," Long went on.

"Do you wonder that one-half billion dollars can be spared for a campaign when your leaders save them taxation of three or four times that much? But the governor was right——the gang has so many lawyers subsidized, milk-fed jobs that if you ever put a tax on the big boys they too would be shouting their heads off for economic government and then we should have reduced taxation. Thanks to the admission governor, and if you don't repeal that income tax, someone will go to Annapolis in 1941 and do it for you."

Discusses Housing

"And do not forget this theory of housing is different with different groups, Long continued. "You are fed up. Very well. That you should have a better and more beautiful home, and you like it. But there is the life-long eternal interest to pay—and pay you must—until some economical upheavel, you lose all your equity therein—and who cares?

"Why did they get you into it in the first place? Simply because as beautiful and truthful as is the essay of better homes for all people they wanted to shift the tax load from the rich, with their tax exempt securities to the backs of the poor. And if that is not a truism, let them figure me out, because I am going to protect you in your investments if given the chance. Tax all alike and there will be plenty of cheap interest on homes."

Legislation Science

"The science of legislation," Long told his radio audience, "is more than problem solving, the preparation, introduction, sponsoring, steering and enactment of laws; it is the ability to analyze and see the folklore of political science in legislation, and to be courageous in resisting it.

"I do not justify anyone who thinks he could get anywhere as a candidate stooging a less hopeful candidate in an effort and on a platform which has been repudiated simply because a secret deal which is admitted to have been repudiated.

"That is the folklore of political science," Long concluded.

Irvine Investigates Bill From County Board

Mayor Harry Irvine yesterday announced his intention of investigating a bill of $10.67 received from the Allegany county commissioners for services of Harold E. Naughton as magistrate of the Juvenile Court.

The bill shows Naughton to have worked one day in February and three in April at eight dollars a day. The county is liable for two-thirds of the total cost, or $21.33, and the city for the rest.

The bill states the law provides that the magistrate is empowered to name a substitute for not more than fifteen days. In conversation with R. Mason Hill, clerk to the commissioners, Mayor Irvine learned that Mrs. Elizabeth R. Menefee, the juvenile magistrate, is allowed fifteen days off without pay.

Father and Son Held as Moonshiners; Looking over Real Estate, They Say

Despite their protestations of innocence, a 63-year-old man and his 40-year-old son were ordered held yesterday for action of a federal grand jury on charges of operating an unregistered still.

Charles D. Wigley, the father, and Charles L. Wigley, of near Bloomington, were ordered held in the county jail in default of bond after a preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner James Alfred Avirett. Bond for the younger Wigley, who allegedly has a record of two previous convictions on federal liquor charges, was set at $1,000; that for his father, at $500.

The defendants, represented by Attorney Estel C. Kelley, denied even knowing of the existence of the still and said they were in the vicinity to look over some land they were considering buying.

But David H. Walker, Federal Alcohol Tax Unit agent, identified the pair as the two men he had seen at the still just a few minutes before they were captured about 100 yards frrom the plant.

Walker, along with Agent Charles E. Cushwa, arrested the men Wednesday and confiscated the 65-gallon still and 150 gallons of mash.

The agents said the still was located along the Savage river, about two miles from Bloomingt
